Foreign Diplomatist Outlines Present Position-France Wants to Pin Down Mr. MacDonald

Belgian Viewpoint Not So Definite-Sacrifice of Reparations Is Apprehended

By Cable from Monitor Bureau LONDON, April 23—The British Government is expected to reply to the Reparations Commission on the subject of the Dawes report in the course of the next few days, but it is generally expected here that there will be an interval till after the French and German elections before the various governments concerned come to grips with the situation. In the meanwhile the newspapers are being inundated with propaganda from all sides, setting forth this view and that view in the hope of creating the desired atmosphere for future negotiations.

A leading foreign diplomatist here in outlining the present position in a conversation with The Christian Science Monitor representative said:
"The British viewpoint as I see it is to put the reports into operation first and then negotiate the total amount of the reparations, the settlement of interallied debts and security. The French, on the other hand, fearing that Great Britain may gradually iso-late itself from continental affairs like the United States, want to pin Ram-say MacDonald down on the questions of sanctions and debts before agreeing to make the concessions demanded in the report regarding the economic control of the occupied regions. The Belgians," he declared, "were midway between the two. They see a real-danger in the possibility of Great Britain refusing to take joint measurement. Britain refusing to take joint measures of coercion against Germany, should the need wise hereafter, and at the same time they have some apprehension lest they should be asked to sacrifice a portion of their share of the reparations in view of the apparent determination of Great Britain to insist on the payment of interto insist on the payment of inter-allied debts which can only be done

"Germany" continued the diplomatist, was the only country which stood to lose nothing under the experts scheme. It could not expect better ferms under any other proposal. Adequate safeguards were provided against a financial collapse. It had no internal debt charges to pay, no army and no navy to kep up. At the army and no navy to kep up. At the same time, any payments it made would have to be in goods or services, so all the time Germany was paying it would be building up a commercial position, which would ultimately give it pre-eminence among the nations of

Until now the German Government had only been asked by the Reparations Commission to give its consent to the experts' plan in general and to declare its willingness to collaborate in its execution.

Three reasons were mainly responsible for the Government's decision, the correspondent was told.

Already there have been informal conversations between the British and French foreign offices regarding the advisability of a second conference to limit armament. Since Jan. 22, when Ilimit armament. Since Jan. 22, when Mr. MacDonald formed his Cabinet, he has frequently voiced his desire for such a conference, and last Wednesday he told the House of Commons he was prepared to reopen the subject. #### Disarmament Statement Finds a Welcome in Great Britain

By Cable from Monitor Bureau LONDON, April 23 — President Coolidge's statement favoring another world disarmament conference is welcomed here warmly. Ramsay Mac-Donald, it will be remembered, in-dicated in the House of Commons last Wednesday that the British Government desires to take up this question.
Mr. MacDonid added, with reference to the proposals put forward by MajorGeneral Seely for advances from Great Britain to other governments for the mutual limitation of armaments, particularly those of the air: "If I felt there was the least chance of receiving a welcome should I make such approaches as he has indicated, I am prepared to do so. I will put it another way. I am quite sure the whole House is with me in this, if any invitation is extended by any other power to help in bringing about this arrangement my door is open."

In the absence of the full text of President Coolidge's statement, of which only a summary has so far arrived, caution is observed in official circles here today in accepting it as fulfilling the condition which Mr. MacDonald laid down, though it is not regarded as constituting any immediate ate invitation.

It also nounces against a purely European ement of inter-allied debts. In course of arguments the problem of debt is divided into two unequal parts. Then came the guards of nonor supplied by the Royal Navy, the Grenadier Guards and the Royal Air Force and then the posting of the representatives of the forces of the Dominions and colonies at each end of the dais, At 11:10 o'clock the Prince of Wales arrived and a quarter of an hour later appeared mounted trum-peters whose inspiring fanfare announced the approach of the King and Queen. The tossing plumes and the shimmering breastplates of the Life Guards, who formed their majesties escort, showed up gallantly against the somber greyness of the concrete as the state procession made its way to the dais steps. "Hush," said everyone as the voice of the Prince of Wales was heard delivering the address of welcome to the King. His voice, transmitted to wireless loud speakers, was audible in all parts of the stadium, as indeed it must have been everywhere in the country where receiving sets were tuned in

The Prince referred to the splendid hoped would bring benefits not only to the British race but to mankind in general. His Majesty made even a more clearly-heard reply. He said he was happy to welcome representatives, official and unofficial, of his Dominions beyond the seas, and re-marked that the exhibition would enable Britishers to take stock of the various activities and resources of the Empire.

Finally he said: "I declare this exhibition open and pray that by the glory of God it may contribute to the welfare of my people and the peace and welfare of the world." Tremendous ap plause greeted His Majesty's speech, after which the Bishop of London read a collect and recited the Lord's Prayer. Miss Thomas, daughter of the Secre of State for the Colonies, ther presented a bouquet to the Queen members of the board of technical officers of the exhibition and the work-men connected with the construction were presented to their majesties, the massed choirs rendered Purcell's "Soul of the World" and Elgar's "Land of Hope and Glory." The massed bands played a grand march and to the strains of "Rule Britannia" the King and Queen departed.

Picture of the History of the British Empire

WEMBLEY, Eng., April 23 (A)-The Prince of Wales, turning over the British Empire Exhibition to King George today, addressed his royal sire as follows: Your Majesty: As president, I ask you graciously to declare open to your people this British Empire Ex-hibition. You see before you a com-plete and vivid representation of all your Empire.

your Empire.

The dominions, India, the colonies, the protectorates, and the mandated territories under your care have joined together in the great task of presenting this picture of your commonwealth of nations.

The exhibition is thus the work of the whole Empire, and it shows the craftsmanship and agricultural skill, the trading and transportation organizations of all our peoples and all our territories.

our territories.

It gives also a living picture of the history of the Empire and its present structure. It will suggest to the world, I truly believe, that the most powerful agency of civilization has its heart set upon peaceful aims and the good of mankind.

Sports and Entertainments

The lighter side of the organization of a great exhibition has not been neglected. It is essential to the success of an enterprise such as this that it should be attractive, that it should encourage the desire for amusement as well as for education. Sports, entertainments, music and arrangements for the comfort of our visitors have been carefully planned.

As president I wish to express my gratitude to those who have helped in this great undertaking—to those men of great vision who are responsible for the first proposal for the exhibition, made before the war to the representatives of the dominions, of India and the colonies.

The great work has been carried

India and the colonies.

The great work has been carried through with splendid loyalty and energy. I hope, sir, that the result of this exhibition will be to impress vividly upon all the peoples of your Empire the advice you have given to them on more than one occasion—that they should be fully awake to their responsibilities as heirs of so glorious an heritage and that they their responsibilities as heirs of so glorious an heritage and that they should be in nowise slothful stewards, but that they should work unitedly and energetically to develop the resources of the Empire for the benefit of the British race, for the benefit of those other races which have accepted our guardianship over their destines, and for the benefit of mankind generally.

The King's Reply

In reply the King said: It give me the greatest pleasure and satisfaction to come here with the Queen for the purpose of opening the British Empire Exhibition. Our heart-British Empire Exhibition. Our heartlest congratulations are due to the board of management, to the executive council and to all who have worked under them, for the marvelous

The exhibition may be said to reveal to us the whole Empire in little, containing within its 220 acres of ground a vivid model of the architecture, art and industry of all the races which come under the British flag.

University Women Hear Plea to End Situation Which Is Depleting Ranks

Special from Monitor Bureau

WASHINGTON, April 23-Woman leaders in four phases of national life addressing a mass meeting of the American Association of University Women last hight called upon the 500 delegates present to shoulder responsibility in public affairs, both local and national, and to put the association in the front of organizations working for social and economic progress through a sound program of action. Speaking on the influence which college women should exert on the Nation through the medium of education, in which the association is primarily interested, Mrs. Cornelia James Can nou of Cambridge, Mass., urged the members to use their influence to stress the "service purpose" in educa-tion. She also emphasized the im-portance of an organized campaign to increase teachers' salaries.

Teachers! "Ranks Depleted"

"Depletion of the ranks of teachers is bringing the public school system face to face with a most serious situation," she declared, adding:

The state boards of education face a discouraging situation. They put much effort into building up excelent normal schools to enriching the curriculum and diversifying the courses, but they report the most able young women refuse to enter the teaching field.

An outstanding feature of the report was the announcement that the Carnegie Corporation, through the Institute of International Education, has made an annual appropriation of $5000 for five years for the work of the committee.

The report of the Committee on Legislative Policies, submitted by Miss Elizabeth Efistman of Washington, D. C., carried as its outstanding recom-mendations that the association wage an active campaign in support of the Sterling-Reed educational bill, the child labor amendment and the participation of the United States in World Court. The association was also asked to go on record as favoring a feachers' safary bill providing an in-crease for the District of Columbia schools and as opposing the equal rights' bill sponsored by the National Woman's Party, because of its possible effect on welfare legislation for women in industry.

The majority against the Governor in Philadelphia was attributed largely to the withdrawal of the support of the organization led by Mr. Vare. He announced last Saturday, after the Governor previously had been indorsed by the Republican state organization as one of its seven slated candidates, that he could not support the Executive because of his suggestion that Francis J. Heney be employed as coun-sel to the Senate committee investigating the Internal Revenue Bureau. The Governor, in reply, declared the liquor question prompted Mr. Vare's Mr. Strassburger, to whom Mr. Vare turned his support, declared the issue was "loyalty to President Coolidge."

Old Bacon House, Rich in Historic Associations, on Verge of Collapse

Natick's Two Ancient Structures Present Contrast-Hopes for Saving the Home of a Minute Man of 1775

NATICK, Mass., April 23 (Special) Two historic old houses, both of the pre-Revolutionary period, one in such a dilapidated condition as to appear almost beyond repair, the other realment of the presenting every outhabilitated and presenting every out-ward appearance of a modern struc-ture save in its lines, stand but a short distance apart on Walnut Street in that part of the town known as Need-

What has been done to the one is held up by citizens interested in the preservation of historical relics as the ed of the other, and it is hoped that before the present summer is ended some organized effort will be made to save the old Bacon House before the elements have completed its destruc-tion. Its owner, Mrs. E. M. Ingraham, hough fearing the necessity of razing it, has, out of deference to these peo-ple, held the matter in abeyance in anticipation of some action.

Overlooking a broad expanse of meadow, the Bacon House, the oldest in the town, presents a forlorn yet majestic appearance. Loath to under-stand the indifference of the townspeople toward its preservation, those who are interested in the preservation of New England's historical old houses hope something will be done before it has succumbed to wind and weather. Pleased that its neighbor, the old Capt. William Faris House, built about 1759, has been well taken care of and re-stored, they are, nevertheless, disturbed over disintegration of the older

Both are closely related in family associations. when the Governor and Ku Klux Klan locked horns and the Legislature summoed itself to assemble illustrated, according to Mr. Hancock, a weakness of the career of Kant, and the impor- in national procedure. The power of auto-assembly, he stated, has never been clearly defined.

Wilson Case Cited

In 1919 when Woodrow Wilson was absent from the executive offices following his tour of the United States when he sought support from the people for the League of Nations, question of the constitutional right of auto-assembly on the part of the Congress was brought forcibly to the attention of the public.

Many times in the last 60 years, he declared, the people of the United States, when they had filed notice of their disapproval of then existing na-tional political administration by defeating the dominant party at the polls, have been impatient that the working out of their will by the new officials chosen to direct national affairs should be delayed by at least four months, or until after the installing of the new Congress and the in-auguration of the new President on the following March 4.

While Mr. Hancock would shorten this period of waiting from election to change of administrations, he would do it so that the Congress be installed the first Monday in the January following the November election, b inauguration of the new national Chief Executive would not take place sooner than it now does. He said:

than it now does. He said:

You will recall the famous HayesTilden disputed presidential election of 1876 and 1878. That election was thrown into the Congress to decide, after the Senate had canvassed the réturns and declared no election had resulted from the halloting in November, 1876. The houses of Congress, sitting jointly, established the famous electoral commission confamous electoral commission sisting of five United States sens five members of the House of Repre sentatives, and five members of the United States Supreme Court. This commission reviewed the returns and decided by a vote of 8 to 7 that Rutherford B. Hayes of Ohio, Republican had been elected.

Revolution Averted

At that time the country was only saved by the fact that the custom growing out of an early mistake or blunder of the Congress of delaying the presidential inauguration by four months after election gave the people time to cool off and to face the terrible fact of what a renewal of civil war would mean. Fet had the custom been to inaugurate the new President within a few days of the election, there would have been notime given to determine the dispute in an orderly manner, and I believe that civil war would have resulted.

should be installed the first Monday in January. That would insure the will of the majority being carried out to an extent, or at least put a termination to the power of an administration which the people had just repudiated, but at the same time the inauguration of the President under our present system of voting and having the vote coupted by the Senate should not be hastened to any great extent for this gives proper time in which to determine in orderly fashion the result of the casting of the ballots. I hope that the present Congress will clear these matters up by wise and remedial legislation. There is no inecessity for a national amendment to the Constitution, it is only necessary to make the change in date of qualifying, the new congressmen a matter of common consent to a resolution.

on his action Mr. Goodwin said: There is no reason why Walsh, just because he happens to be a lawyer, should get any different treatment than a chauffeur who, drives a car for

The statement from the office of the registrar set forth the story of Mr. Walsh's case as follows:

Walsh's case as follows:

Walsh was before the Chelsea Court, Associate Justice George M. Stearns sitting, on April 4, 1924. The matter was called to the registrar's attention by Inspector O'Hara, who was informed on the morning of the fourth that a private session was being held in Judge. Stearn's office. O'Hara went to go in and was told that the hearing was private, but he nevertheless pushed his way in After hearing one witness for the prosecution, the Court ild not ask for any further testimony, but heard the witnesses for the defendant and dismissed the case.

Hearing was given yesterday by the registrar. Officer Edward F. Rooney testified that he saw Walsh's car parked on the Shore Drive on April 2, 1924, at 4.29-p. m., with four people in it and he saw a glass being passed around. The car immediately started ahead and the officer commandered another car and followed. At Revere Street the car again stopped and the glass was again passed around, liquor being poured, from a pint bottle. The officer then went ahead of the car and stopped it, arrested Walsh and brought him to the station house. The officer said Walsh staggered and was manifestly under the influence of liquor. Lieut. Adino S. Albert, who booked Walsh at the station house, testified before the registrar that Walsh was under the influence of liquor, as did officer John F. Smith, driver of the wagon which took Walsh to the station house. Walsh, the defendant, admitted before the registrar that he had taken a glass of wine.

New Hampshire Governor Believed Strong Candidate Against Present Incumbent

MANCHESTER, N. H., April 21 (Special)—Democratic hopes in New Hampshire are crystallizing on an at-tempt to capture the senatorial seat which is to be filled this fall by the choice of a successor to Henry W. Keyes of Haverbill, the junior representative at present in the upper House of Congress. Senator Keyes is a candidate to succeed himself and has no opposition for renomination in the Republican Party. He is now serving his first term, and although entirely inconspictious at Washington as compared with George H. Moses, the senior member, it is believed that he is far stronger politically in his home State and with members of the Republican Party.

The Democrats have an exceptionally strong candidate to put up against Senator Keyes in the present Govresentative at present in the upper Senator Keyes in the present Gov-ernor, Fred H. Brown of Somersworth. Governor Brown carried the State at the election two years ago by the largest majority any Democratic can-didate for that office has received since the Civil War. His administra-tion has been looked upon as successful and the Governor has become personally a more popular man every day. He has reduced the state tax and paid off entirely the state debt.

There is a movement on toot to boom Governor Brown for the vice-presidential nomination at the New York convention. It is not seriously believed, however, that he will be nominated, and the major purpose of A public hearing will be held at the the movement is to increase the Governor's local prestige so that he will become more formidable as a can-

POSTAL-WORKER PAY RISE BILL IS LIKELY TO BE COMPROMISE

Kelly-Edge Plan, Rather Than That Advocated by Mr. New, Expected to Be Followed in Legislation

Special from Monitor Bureau WASHINGTON, April 23 — While latest reports from the Joint Congressional Subcommittee on Postal Salary Rates are that the measure soon to be reported out will be a compromise measur, compounded from the dozens of suggested provisions, it is believed bill upon which the House and Senate Committee will be asked take action will conform more nearly to the Kelly-Edge plan than to that suggested by Harry S. New, Postmaster-General.

The opponents of the New plan—whose criticism of the so-called Post Office Department bill is based upon the belief that it is inadequate in its provisions and tha tits wage differential basis is unsound—are concentratther efforts to obtain legislation, which shall have the following main

An increase over the 1914 scale pro-portional with the increased cost of living:

A blanket pay rise rather than in-cerases proportional to the size of the community; and Elimination of any recommenda-tions as to where the financial burden shall be placed, a matter which pos-shall be placed, a matter which pos-tal employees believe should be treated in a separate measure.

Complications Involved

They point out that the complica-tions which would be involved by including a revenue provision in the measure would be dangerous.

In a statement issued today by the United States Chamber of Commerce it is concluded, "that the need of increasing the pay of postal employees is confined principally to the industrial areas and metropolitan districts, and does not extend to the country at large." It is suggested that "in those large." It is suggested that "in those localities in which the cost of living is exceptional high, postal employees should be allowed a temporary salary supplement on a sliding scale adjusted in accordance with the cost of living, until such time as a proper reclassification of post offices and readjustment of wages can be effected to meet prevailing conditions."

The temporary increases in the pay of postal employees required in accordance with this suggestion would to approximately $11,000,000 per annum. This is, according to the charge of organized postal workers, that no such move is contemplated or an attempt to delay constructive action. They declare that this is the lieve readjustment of rates would be time to effect complete reclassifica- necessary to meet the burden, the tion, and that ample information is on hand for Congress to take action in the near future.

Mass of Statistics

legislation has been put in possession of a mass of statistics proving that the position of the average postal worker increase in revenues of $200,000,000.

The parcel post, which comprises in the depreciation of his dollar. Opof Post Office Clerks, is that the 1914 wage levels in the postal service were the same as those of 1907, and that having been fixed in a panic year, they were abnormally low in relation to general 1914 price levels, the cost of living having advanced 25 per cent over 1907. Today the cost of living, according to the Department of Labor statistics on living costs, is over 110 per cent higher than in 1907, while the maximum salary increase of post office clerks and letter carriers has been only 50 per cent.

That the service is approaching a crisis which can only be averted by postal experts showed that an increase of 2 cents a pound on parcel post mail would produce ample revenue to cover the increased pay rates carried in the Kelly-Edge bill.

"Under present parcel post rates, the Government is giving a practical subsidy to the big business houses which do a large mail order business." declared Mr. George. "There are eight parcels mailed from the large cities for every one mailed to the cities from the country. A slight increase in rates would not be one-half that of handling the same businals where submitted to the joint congressional committee to post mail would produce ample revenue to cover the increased pay rates carried in the Kelly-Edge bill.

There is no need for further investigations. In 1918 Congress appointed a commission on postal salaries, which made an extended investigation covering every part of the country, and after 18 months made their report recommending increases, which they admitted at that time did not balance living costs. This balance has never materialized, and the average cost of living is almost the same as the December of 1918 upon which arguments before the Postal Salary Commission were based. The arguments advanced at that time are as sound today as then, and 'postal clerks still need, in order to live decently, a salary of from $2000 to $2400 a year. The present salary is from $1400 to $1800. There is no need to wait for reports from further investigations to authorize increases, but that is what is being urged under cover; and if the report from the Post Office Department is not forthcoming till June, it would eliminate all possibility of action by this Congress.

In an analysis of the needs of these workers, Henry C. Rathbone (R.), Representative from Illinois, declares Additional help must be provided, but in order to secure that help the job must be made attractive to the kind of man that makes an efficient postal clerk, and that kind of man is not going to be attracted by a wage that is little more than half that paid of skilled mechanic. The present to a skilled mechanic. The present efficient service is being maintained by men and women who are being taxed beyond reasonable bounds. Their period of efficiency is being shortened and the result will be impaired service. Their salaries are not commensurate with the services they perform. The latest budget estimates from Government statistics show that it takes an income of $2458 to maintain an ordinary family. The present salary for post office clerks is from $1400, to $1800.

Limited Field for Work

The postal employee is a skilled worker of the highest type. But he is faced with this disadvantage: the only place he can employ his skill is in the postal service. There is no other market for his services, and when Con-gress fails to provide a salary adequate to maintain him and his family, he must seek outside employment that he can perform during those hours that he needs for rest and recuperation. Or, as so often happens, his wife must seek employment and his childre leave school to supplement his meage

Conditions in the nostal service are admittedly rigorous. About 70 per cent of the postal clerks, the joint committee was told, are compelled to work at night because the large business firms and mail-order houses do not The joint committee in charge of ual user; it has been estimated that deposit their mail until after the close of the business day, Rules and regu-lations governing efficiency records are rigid.

Against the claims of these employees, the question of "ways and means" should have little weight, it is pointed out by their friends in Congress.
"The human element, labor, which enters into the great postal service of the United States, should properly be the first charge against that service, it appears as though it is the last," according to the statement of Mr. Casey in urging approval of legis lation authorizing revision of salary schedules on a "living wage" basis.

There promises to be a wider variety of pictures made this spring and summer than ever before. Last year's "Bigger and better pictures" slogan started such competition in expensive picture-making that a number of pro ducers, trying to establish a world's record, landed high and dry financi-ally. The public helped in a most practical way to point out via the box office that big pictures did not neces-sarily mean good pictures. #### MISSISSIPPI RIVER IS BEING JACKETED

Engineers Near Completion of 50-Year Task, Costing to Date $33,000,000

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., April 4 (Special Correspondence)—A strait-jacket may bring about a revival of the romance and industry of steamboating on the Mississippi River-and the "Father of Waters" may become once more the trade factor it was in Civil ar days. United States engineers from Minne apolis to New Orleans are nearing the mpletion of a 50-year-task of put-g the river in a strait-jacket. The ting the river in a strait-jacket. The task has involved, so far, an expediture of $33,000,000. When the "jacket" is complete and the last "rope" is tied, the Mississippi, "loosest living, shiftiest river in the world," will follow the straight and narrow path and a new era in midcontinent transportation will be possible.

Series of Stone Dams

Engineers are building stone dams which extend from the shore out into the river, diverting the waters into a central channel, deepening the run and insuring sufficient volume to keep the sand moving out. The dams stick out in parallel fingers and the sand washes between the fingers and fills up the midarea, making a regular bank for the stream.

Dams are made of "mattresses" of faggots interlaid with stone and vary in depth from one to eight feet. Three thousand have been placed in the river between Prairie du Chien, Wis., and Minneapolis, and about 1000 more are to be put in place.

Crews now are at work on a section between St. Paul and Hastings, Minn., first sinking the dams through the ice, and how working in the open As sand drifts in and fills up the open space between the fingers of rock, the fingers are extended further out into the river. The dams have reduced the river's width 200 feet, on average, throughout its entire length.

Engineers started improving the upper Mississippi in 1878. They wanted a 4½-foot channel from the junction of the Mississippi and Missouri rivers, to Minneapolis and St. Paul. In 1907, when this task was about complete, it was adjudged inadequate, and Congress decided upon a six-foot channel.

Long Channel Afforded

Long Channel Afforded

It is about 665 miles from the mouth of the river to-Minneapolis, and 611 miles afford the six-foot channel at low water stages. The remaining 55 miles consist of sandbars flung across here and there, most of them near Dubuque, Iz., and between Hastings and St. Paul, Minn.

The Mississippl water level recently was 2.1 feet below "zero." The zero, or stage used in measurement, was the stage set in the low water year of 1864, at that time the lowest in history. The present stage is the lowest on engineering records.

One of the first indications of revival of river traffic was the recent establishment of a fleet of five barges, for freight service between St. Louis, Mo., and Minneapolis. The barges draw 2½ or 3 feet of water, have a capacity of 100 tons each, and are pushed by tugs of propelled by gasoline engine.

It is certain that a comprehensive plan which will provide for the main traffic routes throughout the city and subdrbs is now necessary. The convention is to prepare a plan that can be worked upon by the city council and all the suburban municipal councils. It is said that the cost to the city will be enormous. The cost, however, whatever it may be, will be money well spent.

One new thoroughfare contemplated in London is estimated to cost £6,000,000 for resumption and payment of compensation for business disturbance, but it is believed that in a few years the saving in time and labor will recoup the London ratepayers for this enormous expenditure. Paris is carry-ing out a town planning scheme over a decade that is costing in the aggregate £53,000,000. Chicago is carrying out a scheme of city improvement that is estimated to cost £70,000,000. When what is being done in these and other great cities of the world is taken into account, the cost of the schemes now being contemplated in Sydney are comparatively insignificant. ratively insignificant.

NEW ZEALAND FARMER SAID TO PETITION FOR DIRECT LINE TO JAPAN

TOKYO, April 2 (Special Correspondence)—New Zealand is clamoring for a direct steamship line to Japan, recently, said Mr. Shathin, newspaper man, who has returned to Japan after several months spent in New Zealand and Australia. He said:

New Zealand and Australia. He said: The New Zealand Farmers' Union has petitioned the Government to subsidize a direct ship line to Japan, even if it be operated by a foreign-company. Exporters in that country must now transship their goods through Sydney, Australia, thus increasing freight costs and handicapping them in competition with goods exported to Japan from Australia.

New Zealand hopes to export beet, mutton, wool, and dairy products to Japan in larger quantities than in the past, and is buying in return silk, glassware, and cotton piece goods.
Japanese-New Zealand trade might be increased greatly if Japan would station a commercial agent permanently in New-Zealand.

Paris, April 23

REFERENCE has already been made to the possible successor to Brig.-Gen. Charles G. Dawes, who will remain in close contact with the Reparation Commission as an American expert. It is felt that in carrying out the plan an American adviser is constantly needed. In French circles today some confirmation is given the suggestion that David Morrow, who is connected with the Morgan bank, will not be appointed precisely to the post proposed, but precisely to the post proposed, but nevertheless charged with an important mission, namely, to prepare the way for a loan of $200,000,000 destined to Germany to begin fulfillment of the lack of squilibrium which in his opinion exists to Germany to begin fulfillment of the plan. Naturally America is expected to participate very largely in the first.

The new Poincaré Government ceras to catch the votes of all parties who are not absolutely opposed to M. Poincaré personally, and the Prime Minister has cleverly includued in his government those who were his not to of Parliament, but this weapon is blunted by reason of the fact that the French President can only make use of that right if he is authorized by the Senate. What M. Millerand wants is full and unwinited right in the senate who were his not senate. ainly ought to make an appeal to the Poincaré personally, and the Prime the Senate. What M. Millerand wants minister has cleverly includued in his is full and unwinted right to appeal government those who were his most to the people—that is to say to dispotent enemies. They are thus as it solve Parliament with or without the were bought over and the prospect that M. Poincaré himself will be per-mitted to carry out the Poincaré policy is vastly improved. Naturally, there is some dismay in those warters which thought that the Prime Minister would swing more to the Right. Instead, he has swung to the Left and, as was stated in these columns a long time ago, poses rather as the leader of a Center-Left Party than of a Center-Right Party.

In the meantime the situation of M. Millerand is arousing much discussion. It is known that he desires the presiannounced today. He declared this the dency to be a real post of power, somewhat on the lines of the American presidency. But in France it is impossible for a President to exercise full authority. The theory of the Constitution is that he is irresponsible and that, as he cannot be called to account for his actions, he should have no effective power. Most presidents no effective power. Most presidents dains that whatever they do must be countersigned by a Minister, and M. Millerand is only following the path of his predecessors. When the recent political crisis arose he wished then and there to issue a message to Parliament, but M. Poincaré, who has himment, but M. Poincaré, who has himment, but M. Poincaré, would not countrie the scanties to a same president, would not countrie to the scanties to a same president. They are now in revolt. They are Registered at The Christian ment, but M. Poincaré, who has himself been President, would not countersign such a message. Therefore M. Millerand fell back on the press and through one of the Paris newspapers ssued a personal declaration of bolicy. True, it was not described as a presidential message, but its origin was not left in doubt and its import was perfectly clear. From this it is believed that should the elections go against the National Party, should the Bloc des Gauches by chance triumph at the polls, M. Millerand will have no option but to resign.

> consent of the Senate whenever he thinks proper. After stagnation there is a boom in building. Building operations are proceeding in all parts of the city and a few years should see an end of the housing shortage which has been so severely felt since the war. In order to make room, old and disused houses, of which there are many in Paris, are being pulled down and great modern buildings with many floors are being put up in their place. It has become a problem what to do with the earth and rubbish from the blocks of buildings in course of demolition. There have been solemn debates on this subject and it was finally decided that a refuse depôt should be established on the quays by the side of the Seine. There the broken bricks and decaying beams will be deposited and then taken down the river to sea in river barges

Since the employers are willing to admit the justice of all their claims except those which relate to money, there is no need to go into them But they will not agree to a 30 per cent increase. They suggest an in-crease of 7 per cent; that is to say, about a franc a day. It is not much, the 13 or 14 francs a day that is now paid. The midinettes intend to stick to their guns and even threaten that if the employers will not meet them they will put down their needles and strike. Probably a compromise will be reached and a strike avoided, but it is difficult not to take the side of the midinettes in this matter.

How does the country take the new taxes which have been imposed upon it? Correspondence with the provinces of France shows that the blow has fallen heavily on that large class which has a small pension or a small income from life savings. The rentiers, as they are called, are perhaps more numerous in France than in any other country, and many of them have barely sufficient for their needs. A 20 per cent increase in taxation means that they are badly prached. When still more drastic steps are taken, as they must be taken if France is to on a sound financial footing, the plight of these people will be pitiful. Indeed, this is the chief difficulty in France. While it is essential that more revenue should be raised by the state, the class upon which any large increase of taxation will fall will be quite legitimately in revolt. In Paris itself there does not appear to be much opposition, but in other towns and #Mages there is the bitterest outcry. Naturally, this will affect the elections, though to what extent it would be difficult to

FRENCH EXPOSITION LOYAL EXAMPLES . OPENS IN NEW YORK FOR ALIENS URGED

Displays of Activities at Grand Central Palace

Special from Monitor Bureau NEW YORK, April 23-With a speech by J. Jules Jusserand, French Ambas-sador to the United States, and other appropriate ceremonies, the first French Exposition to be held in America, was opened at Grand Centrai Palace yesterday. One hundred and fifty manufacturers and artists of France, backed by their Government, have combined to bring to the United States at this time a comprehensive cross section of French industrial activities, which will be shown until the close of the exposition on Saturday evening, May 3. The proceeds of the exposition will be divided between three French charities in New York, it, is announced.

A prime feature of the opening vent was the initial appearance here event was the initial appearance here of 30 French manikins sent by prominent couturiers of Paris—Worth, Callot, Paquin, Vionnet, Jenny, Lanyin, Redfern, Drecoll, Beer and Cheruit, to display their newest creations in gowns and wraps. Howard Greenley, art director of the exposition, has designed a Louis XVI salon wherein the manikins show the styles which are to prevail with Paris women this year. Another major attraction is a $50,- 000 Gobelin tapestry which the French Government is presenting to the United States. This tapestry, 23 feet square, and said to have acquired five years to produce, is woven of silk in five colors, and depicts a group of khaki-clad soldiers embarking for the World War. It will be placed in the new Philadelphia Art Museum at the close of the exposition.

The exhibits range from a tiny bottle of perfume valued at $100, to the motor car which Citroen invented to traverse desert sands, and which crossed the Sahara Desert. French jewelers, glassmakers, and manufac-turers and dealers in hardware, knitted wear, furs, automobiles, laces, linens, napery, leather goods, lingerie and hosiery, precision instruments, photographic supplies, silversmiths interior decorators, besides railroad and steamship and hotel interests are represented in the Grand Central Palace exposition.

An attractive French background has been wrought by Mr. Greenley on the main floor of the big Lexington Avenue exhibition hall, the Louis XIV motif being used for the central salon. and the Versailles garden architecture for the spaces at the end. Albert Blum is president of the or-

Manufacturers and Artists Have Misdeeds of Immigrants Laid at Americans' Own Doors by California Woman

> By a Staff Correspondent SAN FRANCISCO, Calif., April 23-Following results of a state-wide social survey announced here by the American Citizenship Council, which reveals that 22 per cent of California's population is non-English speaking. Mrs. Maynard Force Thayer, state Mrs. Maynard Force Thayer, state chairman of American citizenship of the California Federation of Women's Clubs, yesterday told a meeting of council members that "it is high time to rededicate every existing agency to the cause of law enforcement in all its aspects and stop shifting the responsibility for the waywardness of our foreign population." She added:

It is apparently fashionable to "pass the buck" to the bootlegging be careful that we do not fall into that error. With California black on law enforcement, with 49 per cent of the electorate voting in 1920 and 47 per cent in 1822—contrasted, for instance, with England's recent 80 per general deductions:

That primary responsibility for law enforcement rests on the native-born citizen, not on the foreigner:
That the so-called law-abiding respectable citizen who chooses to disregard the validity of laws not to his liking is by this exemplification of

That we must not be provincial ourselves if we would break up the little Italys and the Ghettoes that are honeycombing the foundations of American social institutions;
That we must share the best things with those foreigners already here or we shall be poorer for our economy. I predict that results in the next state election will prove that the women of California are thinking and wightly responsible to a cell as in rightly, responsive to a call as in perative and mandatory as in 193 when the women beat organized law lessness so decisively at the polls.

Along with this currency reform has gone a strengthening of the chervoutsi, the 10-ruble notes of the State Bank which for a long time represented the only stable currency medium in Russia. A month ago the chervonetz was somewhat below par, having a value of approximately $4.50. Recently it has gained steadily in value in relation to foreign currencies, and today it stands practically at par, being worth almost exactly $5

One of the reasons for the rise in the value of the chervonetz is unques-tionably the increased use of Russian currency in transactions abroad. Foreign buyers of Russian goods are using chervontsi to an increasing degree in carrying on their business. This is clearly indicated by figures just published by the Finance Commissariat, which show that the number of chervontsi sold abroad increased from 2,-693,000 in January to 4,041,000 in February. These figures represent values respectively, of $13,500,000 and $20,-

GAINS OF BRITISH HOUSING ACTS SEIZED ON BY PEOPLE OF MEANS

Government Use of Public Money Achieves Good Results,

By HENRY R. ALDRIDGE

Secretary National Housing and Town Planning Council

Special from Monitor Bureau LONDON, April 11-When the campaign to sweep Great Britain clear of bad housing conditions and secure for bad housing conditions and secure for every family, however poor, a whole-sale dwelling in which a proper family life can be lived has been fought and fully won, two dates will stand out in the history of the movement as truly memorable.

The first of these is the date April 11, 1919, on which King George V called to Buckingham Palace a gathering of municipal representatives and housing reformers to hear an address of singureformers to hear an address of singular force and eloquence concerning the duty of the Nation in regard to hous-

Concerning the need for action, the words of the King were clear and un-compromising as will be seen from the

While the housing of the working classes has always been a question of the greatest social importance, never has it been so important as now is not too much to say that an adequate solution of the housing question is the foundation of all social progress. Health and housing are indiscolubly connected.

Municipal Ability

Equally clear was the King's call to municipal activity:

The local authorities of England The local authorities of England and Wales are now being called upon to take a leading part in dealing with one of the most urgent problems which confront the Nation at his moment, and the adequate solution of the housing question will depend in no small measure upon the energy and ability which the local authorities bring to bear in the discharge of the responsible duties with which they are intrusted.

In due course the Housing Acts of

In due course the Housing Acts of July, 1919 (England and Wales) and August, 1919 (Scotland) were passed, and the Minister of Health, Dr. Addiand the Minister of Health, Dr. Addison, entered with zeal upon his task of guiding and stimulating the great municipal offensive called for in the King's speech.

The main issues of the controversy, which arose after two years of strennous effort, are so familiar to readers.

throughout the world that there is no need to recapitulate them here.

With regard to the value of the results it should be sufficient to state that the city, town and district councils of Great Britain are the owners of 200,000 houses with at least a million normalizing in them. These houses are population in them. These houses are distributed in 5000 different villages

An Outline of Achievements

Concerning the general value of this achievement there can be no doubt. It can be clearly set out in the following eight points:

1. The houses are tenanted by those for whom they have been built. Local authorities have in 20 per cent of the cases given precedence to families of ex-service men.

2. About 85 per cent of the houses contain three bedrooms; 5 per cent have four bedrooms, and about 10 per cent two bedrooms.

per cent two bedrooms.

3. About 40 per cent of the houses have parlors. The remainder have a living room and a scullery. In urban freas the houses are as a rule provided with baths.

4. In urban areas the number of 12 houses to the acre has been adopted as a standard. In rural areas from four to eight to the acre.

5. Special efforts have been made to eliminate costly road expenditure and adopt inexpensive garden suburb to eliminate costly road expenditure and adopt inexpensive garden suburb standards of layout. The minimum distance between house fronts is 60 feet, and the greater part of this space is given in the form of setbacks in front gardens.

6. The designs are on the whole good. Suggestions that the houses are, generally little better than brick or concrete "pill boxes" will not be entertained by any fair-minded men who have taken the trouble to see the houses for themselves.

7. In many parts of rural England the rent charged for a parlor cottage is 5s. a week, plus rates. Through-

High Cost of Building

It can now be clearly recognized that the reaction of 1921-23 was bound to ensue, on the ground of the great cost incurred in building the houses. In some cases the total cost reached quite £ 1200 as compared with a prewar cost for houses of a similar type

It cannot be fairly said that the carrying into effect of the housing policy was the main factor in produc-ing high prices. The great cause of the inflation of prices was undoubtedly the industrial building boom of 1919-21. Encouraged by the knowledge that under certain conditions money which would otherwise be paid in excess profits duty could be directed to the rebuilding of factories, industrialists, both great and small, called on con tractors to do work on a "time-and-material basis" under conditions which meant that money was no object so long as the work was done. The effect of these high prices had inevitably spread to the field of municipal cottage building, when the economic critics of the housing policy of 1919 began their attacks. Housing reformers were compelled to fight a battle in defense of municipal housing under conditions which at the outset seemed to point to the complete failure of the movement.

But while the direct attack on musufficient power to persuade the Government to adopt a dual policy of state aid to private enterprise on the one hand and state aid to local authorities under contract thorities on the other. This was the object of the Act of 1923, the modus object of the Act of 1923, the modus of £650 less the Government subsidy. ## Old and New Dockets in Art

THE whirligig of time, like a revolving phare, is ever casting new light on old dockets. Obscure even light on old dockets. Obscure even in his down day, Robert L. Newman stands once again in the public eye through the current exhibition of his paintings at the Rehn Galleries. In 1894, when this artist was three score and seven, his canvases were publicly displayed at Knoedler's in New York for the very first time and the Evening Post of that date spoke of him as "never seen in the art galleries, nor yet in the sales." in the art galleries, nor yet in the sales which occur at frequent intervals There was a subsequent showing of his work in Boston, but this was practically Newman's one bid for general recognition, by no fault of his own, however, for matter had come to a head entirely ough the kind offices of his friends.

Newman is decidedly of the cameo class of artists, a rare, delicate, and reclusive personality. He follows somewhat humbly after that thoroughly poetic and highly important ornament to nineteenth century American art, Albert P. Ryder, yet he preserves his own pictorial romancings quite free from any emulative touch. Small in size and compressed in thought and sentiment, like sonnets, these canvases were comsonnets, these canvases were comtouched by the pressure of pride or patron. Fact and fancy blend gently here, whether the subject matter be from the Scriptures or from popular legend. Individual form is developed sufficiently to make clear the context, but the artist's aim is primarily decorative and tonal. The coloring is always rich and tonal. The coloring is always rich and full-bodied, reminiscent of the French Millet whose canvases attracted this young Virginian when he was on his second visit to Paris in 1854 to such an extent that he purchased several to bring to America. After the Civil War was over, Newman returned to his quiet life. Mr. Pehn has been unward of life. Mr. Rehn has been upward of three years collecting the canvases now on view, which come as loans from various sources. Only one or two public collections possess examples of this little known American painter, so that the present opportunity to make his somethat tardy acquaintance is of excep-painters is quite justmatie. Irving R. Wiles' self portrait is very brisk and engaging, as is Lydia Field Emmet's pretty treatise on two little girls and a gold-fish bowl. Mr. Hopkinson's likeness of Henry P. Davison is one of his best efforts, with a fine range of high lights and half tones, and Mr. Haggin's glinting, swirling vision of an eastern dancing malden is virtuosity itself. Two dozen degrees of skill and vision, spread dozen degrees of skill and vision, spread dozen degrees of skill and vision, spread out through the other exhibitors, com-plete the story. plete the story. May their annual convention multiply their talents.

Elsewhere such names are found on the art catalogues as Victor Charreton, George Luks, Anna Coleman Ladd, A. Walkowitz. Rockwell Kent. Percival Rosseau, Boris Anisfeld, Bryson Buriroughs, Peter Marcus, etc. Mr. Charreton is at Dudensing's with a brand new array of colorful French landscapes, quite in his best manner. George Luks, provides little that is new at the Kraushaar Galleries. Those familiar with his individual talents will doubtless find the study of a woman sweeping snow his most expressive canvas; those unfamiliar with Mr. Luks' work will perhaps wonder at the diversity of manners in this small exhibition, where his "Mrs. Coby" goes all the way back to George Fuller's time in tone and temper, where his "Barge Girl" crosses the quiet path of J. M. Whistler, and his "Street Preacher" is This bown and thoroughly up to date. Peter Marcus' etchings at the Kennedy Galleries, where some old and rare sporting prints in color are likewise being shown, have tonal dignity and weight. Mr. Kent's large retrospective exhibition at Wildenstein's is commanding and will be reviewed later.

cast, which he does with all his well-known skill and intensity of characterization; and May McAvoy, though by more obvious methods, turns her natural beauty into the unlovely lineaments of drab Laura. Before the transformation is effected on the screen, when Miss McAvoy blossoms as her natural self, and Mr. Barthelmess stands strong and straight on his two feet, the eye has wearied of the long miseries and the story has drooped without the heartening tones of the voices. "The Enchanted Cottage" is seven-eighths plodding prose and only such a small part winged poetry. Who knows how a better balance might have been arranged or what other agency pressed into service? Somewhere the muted violins should have given tremulous accompaniment to the bass viols; somewhere a hint of glimmering lights among the shadows. Not so much a disparagement of things accomplished (and most artistically at that) but as an inquiry as to mediums and optical the rest of the U. S. A. must be content to wait. Whether this latest foolery is better than its predecessors is an unimportant point, because ever since "Grandma's Boy" put Mr. Lloyd in the star class, his work has been consistently original and amusing, brimming over with individual conceits and whimsicalities, and there is every reason to believe that it will continue to be such. This romance of two old containers—a battered dog-biscuit box and an old crackerjack packare are important points in the plot—ambles gently to the mark, gets set and off with none too great abandon, but ends up with a whirlwind finish that the movies alone are able to provide. About an inquiry as to mediums and optical weights and measure are these lines arranged, with an abiding confidence that the more ethereal values and possibilities of the screen contain the requisite solution. The motion pictures have these ways and the contain the requisite solution. their own and powerful modes of elo-quence, hardly tapped as yet. R. F.

Aston Knight's Paintings in Paris

PARIS, April 4 (Special Correspondnce) The American Ambassador, Myron T. Herrick, has inaugurated an nportant exhibition of Aston Knight's locomotion is pressed into service, only to fail him. It is a breathtaking, hilarious, Gilpenesque affair, this cross-country, cross-city chase that keeps the audience on edge until the final stretch when Harold, on the back of two plunging dray horses, arrives on the scene of matrimony and abducts the bride. It is furious fun, with Mr. Lloyd at his best; and that is really, after all, enough-said.

R. F. works in the Galerie Charpentier in Paris. The show contains 112 oil painting and 20 water-colors. Those who have admired his compositions at the Salon des Aristes Francais of which he is a member "hors concours" and in diverse expositions have found in the Galerie Charpentier these same qualities which make of Mr. Aston Knight a painter in the full meaning of the word. What strikes one most in this exhibition is the variety of subjects interpreted and also the unity of execution which yet escapes monotony.

The drawing in Mr. Knight's works is firm and shows a well disciplined art. He condenses in his landscapes the effects of nature and atmosphere proper to each country he interprets. He tries to give a true impression and this is Paris. The show contains 112 oil paint-

A STUDENT of the outdoors, Mary of her garden studies, trees, salt Mc. Coll, has assembled a number marshes, etc., at the Todd Studios Exceedingly satisfying are two cineraria pieces, one in water color, the other realistically treated. A charming red-clover decoration set up against purple striped wall paper, is one of the most refreshing subjects she has, as Miss Mc. Coll is at her best in design. "Silver Birches" is very pleasing; here are dorles, dogwood, and autumn pinks and purple of oak trees; holly-hocks, and several figure studies, deserving praise. Much of the work was done about Gloucester, and the land-scapes in the foothills of the Ozarks. Takuma Kajiwara is displaying oil paintings at the Town Club. His portraits show proper attention to detail Exceedingly satisfying are two cine-ciuded, charming little groups of trees, hill country and sunny spaces.

Our regular consignment from the Taos colony is being shown at the Noonan-Kocian Galleries. Among the painters represented is Oscar Berninghaus with a unique decorative composition called "Aspens," these tall white trunks rising to yellow plumes at the top, two Indian ponies and their riders in the foreground. This is painted with a certain direct intent and quite different in sentiment from another, a little canvas, a half dozen patient ponies waiting in the moonlight by a low-browed shack, for their uncertain masters. Of the other familiar members of this colony, Irvine Couse has some well painted poetic Indians, and J. H. Sharp a realistic, but unatmospheric road and Indians, "The Rendezvous."

The setting and exhibits, with the added touch of modernism in the batik hangings, effected a laudable result in the sculptor-members' showing at the 'Artists' Guild. Among the sculptors Artists' Guild. Among the sculptors exhibiting is Adele Schulenburg, in whose work there is the striving to exexhibiting is Addete Schulenburg, in whose work there is the striving to express the abstract idea, and this gives her broadness. There is a delicately felt low relief head, "Brahms," also little plaques of children. "The Burden of the Race" connotes a thinker; which quality can be added to this artist's plastic talents. Nancy Coonsman's work is realistically human and happy. She is successful in the designing of fountains, one of which stands in the sunken garden of the Public Library, and another, a "Frog Girl's Fountain," is in replica here; and she also has a relief portrait of William Marion Reedy. Two smilling "Baby Torcheurs" are well rendered, and a robust, laughing youngster on a globe—a garden pool project of rouged plaster—deserves notice.

serves notice. Carolin Risque's careful delineations of childhood are a pleasure to note. A joyous "Fish Baby Fountain" is a near Pompeian classic. Sheila Burlingame's Pompeian classic. Sheila Burlingame's little figures are expressive, though they might be carried farther; her designs of batik hangings are primarily decorative harmonies. Röbert P. Bringhurst shows several well executed portrait heads. Joseph Horchert has some well designed groups of lions. Julie Yates shows a well studied portrait head. Victor Holm offers a variety of strongly developed subjects—portraits, groups, and designs of monuments. C. F. M.

Two paintings by Nicholas Poussin. French classicist, have been acquired by the Metropolitan Museum of Art. New York. They are "St. Peter and St. John Healing the Lame Man." painted in 1655, and "Blind Orion Searching for the Rising Sun," painted in 1658.

Milan, Italy

Special Correspondence

HOSE who attend performances at

THOSE who attend performances at the celebrated Scala Theater at Milan have the privilege, between the acts, of visiting the adjacent theater museum; and, since this museum contains so much that is of interest and value to the student of theater history, it is much to be hoped that arrangements may be made by which it may be accessible also at other times than those limited and punctuated by the rise of the curtain for another act.

The museum is entered by a large door, on either side of which are marble tablets bearing the names of the 70 donors to whose generosity its foundation is due. The nucleus of the existing museum was formed by the rich collection of theater treasures of Jules Sambon, which, in 1911, being put up for auction, was on the eve of being carried off from Paris to America, with the aid and on the initiative of a millionaire collector who wished it to adorn the Methopolitan Opera House of New York. This fact coming to the knowledge of Arrigo Bolto, he set himself, in conjunction with the Dyke Uberto Visconti and Ettors Modiglioni, to secure this valuable and unique collettoon for the Scala, Modiglioni, hastening to Paris, succeeded, with the laid of the Italian Amble and unique collection for the Scala, Modiglioni, hastening to Paris, succeeded, with the laid of the Italian Ambassador, Tittoni, in inducing the American purchaser to withdraw and allow the representatives of the Scala to acquire the collection, which was done under the auspices of the Ministry of Instruction and with the aid of Italian subscribers.

struction and with the aid of Italian subscribers.

Thus the Sambon Collection, so rich in 'relics' of the Italian theater and Italian actors, was brought to Milan, and established in a building close to the Scala, formed the nucleus of a museum which has been since enriched with many gifts, and is doubtless to grow, with further gifts and bequests, ever more and more valuable for students of the history of the theater.

Here the great names of musicians and singers, of actors and actresses, of scenographers and dancers are conjured up by portraits and busts, by autographs and relics of every find. Here may be found musical instruments of every type and period and land. Here, also, are medallious, statuettes, masks, fans, opera glasses, bronzes, terracotta figures and statuettes, lamps, stage jewels, programs, libretti of operas, manuscripts of comedies and dramas, stage properties, scenic designs, and objects of every variety of historical and personal interest.

A catalogue was printed in 1914, but since that time many further gifts have been received, including autographs and other memorials of celebrated

Edith Nankivell, daughter of Frank A. Nankivell, the illustrator, cartoonist and painter, received word in New York from Paris recently that two cichings she had on exhibition at the Paris Salon had been accepted. One of her etchings submitted to the jury showed the old wooden buildings on Fortieth Street, with akyscrapers in Times Square, New York, as a background.

Books in Brief

Voices in the Wilderness, by John Ressich (New York: E. P. Dutton. $2) is a volume of short stories by an English writer, whose title, with its atmosphere of tragic futility, is out of turie with the somewhat plearesque air of his tales. Cosmopolitan to a degree, lie writes with equal ease of the adventures of American art students in Paris, racing in England, and the fighting of English Tommies in the African desert. Now and then he suggests Richard Harding Davis or O. Henry, at his more journalese, but eyen at his best, there is something strangely forced about his informality. Basily the most entertaining story in the book and the most memorable portrait is that of 'Orace, the slow, unbiliking elevator boy of a London apartment house, whose tenure of office terminated suddenly on the third day because he remarked sorrowfully to two persons whom he was taking to the fifth floor that the building was on fire. In a few moments the house was in an uproar so great that 'Orace found it wise to take his departure, still quiet, still sorrowful, to other scenes. Ressich calls this story, "Je M'en Fiche." It is the simplest of them all, and perhaps for that reason best suited to his non-chalance of narration. These stories are worthy of comparison with the average of better American magazine stories, rather than with the best of each year. In almost every instance they would be improved by greater economy of words and a clearer delineation of plot.

Modern Foreign Exchange, by Hubert C. Walter (New York: Robert M. Mc-

Mozart Follows Wagner
on Philadelphia Program PHILADELPHIA, April 21 (Special Correspondence) — The Philadelphia Corchestra, under Dr. Stokowski, for its week-end program offered Wagner and Mozart. Wagner had the leonine share, with the prelude 40 "Parsifal," ithe "Good Friday Spell," and then the Paris version of the voerture and silent indication of metrical accent, but the actual production of sound, as if the fingers of an organist were touching the mightiest of responsive keys. It was a singular arrangement of the program that followed such a pungent, highly-spiced score as that of "Tannhauser," with the bland, limpid and gracious quality of Mozart's "Jupiter" symphony. This would have been better placed as the prelude, rather than the postlude, of the concert. Dr. Stokowski read it with a delicate deftness, and had the strings constantly vary the stresses so that the measures rippled and sang and were vital.

New Opera by M. Rabaud at the Opéra-Comique

PARIS, April 11 (Special Correspondence)—The new work of Henri Rabaud produced at the Opéra-Comique under the name of "L'Appel de la Mer" is a lyrical drama built on J. M. Synge's "Riders to the Sea." This sea does not reflect Hellenic blue skies. Hardly do we see it, but we feel that it can only roar and moan. And its moanings mingle should bring Mr. Walter the gratitude of all new students of foreign exchange, and that is the wealth of concrete examples explaining foreign exchange transactions and methods, the practical working out of which is too often left to the ingenuity of the reader. A previous knowledge of international exchange is not necessary, to an intelligent reading of this book. Mr. Walter has taken with the distance of the present which can be compared to the working out of the present with the meaning for the present with those of a woman who has seen her five sons successively answering its least the five sons successively and the five sons successively and share, with the prelude to "Parsifal," ithe "Good Friday Spell," and then the Paris version of the "overture and Venusberg music from "Tannhäuser." There was sharp contrast between the lofty serenity of the "Parsifal" music and the abandon of the Bacchanale. In the "Tannhäuser" score, however, Dr. Stokowski seemed to command more firmly than at any other time this season a unified instrument in his orchestra. As the music rose like the crested foam of sea waves to its leaping climaxes the sweep of the leader's hands in wift parallel arcs or in independent motion made it seem not merely the silent indication of metrical accent, but the actual production of sound, as if the actual production of sound, as if M. Albert Wolff, brought to light all the cedence of instinct.

But the polgnant character of the work carries away all objections. Taken as a whole the score of "L'Appel de la Mer" is bound to have a strong appeal for the public.

The orchestra, under the direction of M. Albert Wolff, brought to light all the quality of M. Rabaud's composition. Mile. Balguerie was a worthy interpreter of the thought of the author.

All-America Co. Buying French Rights-Decrease in Rates Is Forecast

CARACAS, Venezuela, March 17 (Special Correspondence)—The All-America Cable Company, which has established and maintains a cable to New York extending from Colombia and Panama around the west coast and up the east coast of South America to Rio de Janeiro has virtually completed the purchase of the United States-Haiti cable of the French Transatlantic Cable Company. By this move this American company obtains the full ewnership of the French cable to Haiti, and Santo Domingo, Porto Rico, the French West Indies, Curação and Venezuela, and a valuable contract with the British cable which will link all the northern ports of Brazil and carry into Venezuela, completing the circle of the All-Amerca completely around the continent of South America.

As an alternative, or possibly in As an alternative, of possess, addition to this, this same group is said to be negotiating with the Venezuelan Government for the erection of powerful radio station in Venezuela which will be able not only to communicate with the United States and Europe, but will be the relay station for the great wireless stations in other parts of South America, notably at Buenos Aires and at Rio de Janeiro.

Boon to South America The connecting up of the All-America cables, which as an organization is only 10 years old, with Vene-zuela and with nearly all of the West Indies, which it has not heretofore touched, and the completion of its loop around South America are in them-selves of vast significance to the deby its connections with New

When to this is added the messages by radio from every capital of South America concentrating in Caracas and thence being relayed in another fanspread direct to all the world. the imagination takes time to grasp it. Nor is it anti-climax to add that in all probability the arrangements with the British cable in Brazil and Trinadad will open through that cable and the All-America the whole of South America on a low-rate, non-monepoly basis, to Europe and to Asia.

To Venezuela, the new arrangement is fraught with great possibilities. The French cable has held a monopoly of service to this country, under old concession given when the cable was originally laid. This monopoly has kept the All-America, as it has kept the British cable for a yet longer time, from connecting with Venezuela.

As a result of the monopoly, the price of messages has been $1 a word, to New York, as compared with the All-America rate over nearly all South America of 50 cents a word.

More than that, the cable has been accompared by the increased has been so congested by the increased business brought to it by the oil companies now flocking to Venezuela that, in order to be sure of getting messages through, a "triple urgent" rate has often to be paid—$3 a word! Then, too, the cable itself is old and is often out of commission for hours and days at a time, during the hurricane season in the in the West Indies, and the ing machinery and even a new cable, are imperative necessities.

Monopoly Is Sought

The French monopoly, which the All-America takes over, runs until 1929, and as the All-America wishes to and as the All-America wishes to make many improvements at once, it feels the protection of the monopoly alone will justify the expenditure required. With the expiration of the old concession, the British cable undoubtedly would be landed from Trinidad, which is close off the shores of Venezuela, and the All-America would be in a weaker position in its negotiations for the combined service with the British toward which it now is working.

French cable now reaches Maracaibo by going from La Guayra to the Dutch island of Curacao, thence by cable to the Venezuelan port of Coro, and the remaining 200 miles by the Venezue-lan lines. This is eminently unsatis-factory and in the interest of the great volume of business in Maracaibo of the necessary and hoped-for im-provements which will be made by the All-America must be the laying of a agood cable or a direct land line into this important section.

The eight Venezuelan Government radio stations are well placed throughout the country, but this good distribution is largely nullified for foreigners by the fact that their messages rannot travel beyond the confines of cannot travel beyond the confines of their own states and the station at the

WOMAN TO LEAD SOCIALIST PARTY

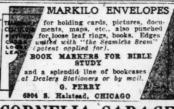

Mrs. Bertha Hale White Issues Call for National Convention

Special from Monitor Bureau" CHICAGO, April 23-For the first time in the United States, it is said, a woman is managing a national political campaign. This new leader is Mrs. Bertha Hale White, executive secretary of the Socialist Party of America, who, from her office at the national headquarters of the party in Chicago, routes speakers, compiles and sends out campaign literature and raises money to carry on activities. She issued the call for this year's national convention of the party and will preside when it convenes at Cleveland on July 6. In an interview for The Christian Science Monitor Mrs. White explained that she does not feel like a pioneer because it has seemed only natural that she assume this office As assistant secretary, she learned the work thoroughly and no one else was proposed for the office when she was chosen by the national executive committee of the party in St. Louis, Feb. 9. Mrs. White declared that she never thought of being a feminist, that in fact she gave no attention to, woman's suffrage until she became interested in reform legislation. Married young and living in conservative circles, she was little concerned with woman's rights. But her husband was a mine manager, and living in small mining towns awakened her to the need for greater protection for workers which she soon came to see must be sought by the ballot. She be-lleves that the time has now come for women to cease to work independently from men.

While Mrs. White dislikes public speaking, she does her share of it. All day members of the party come into her office to ask for advice about local campaigns, how to raise money, what to say in the press. She thinks quickly and speaks effectively.

"If conditions exist in our country which ought not to exist, it is to the ENTAILED PROPERTY shame of each one of us, whether we belong to the party involved or not. But if we have failed in civic duty, our country is no less wonderful." Then she added, "If women only realized their power!'

Well, the truth of the matter is that the Outline of Literature has badly botched a considerable part of the modern foreign literatures. Its sections on Spain and Italy are unbelievably bad; its Germany is skimped; an entire continent it ignores, as well as omitting all mention of Portugal, once the rival of England in commerce and cradle of one of the great epic poets of the world—a poet whom many an Englishman. old and modern, has lovingly translated into English and studied with fond diligence.

Imagine a section on modern Germany, however small, that omits all reference to Gerhart Hauptmann, a genius who in the evolution of his labors has gone through almost every phase of the finer Teuton nature. There is room, in the Outline, for a list of problematical latter-day novellsts in the United States, but not a drop of ink to print Hauptmann's name. #### Germany in Defeat

By Geof Moss. New Boni & right, $2.

This volume of short Germany confirms the impression given last year by the author's novel, "Sweet Pepper," that in Major Moss we have a real lit-erary artist. "Sweet Pepper" was a erary artist. "Sweet Pepper" was a first novel. But its characters lived and it had action, motivation, inevitability. More, it had a charm of style and an atmosphere that left an impression which has persisted through floods of books following.

Something of these qualities is evident in this new collection of stories. Yet each is individual, and the protagonists are clearly defined. It may be because Major Moss is working on smaller canvases, but he seems to have gained in terseness of characterization; there is less sense than before of literary effort.

The pity and the tragedy of Germany's plight are here epitomized more effectively than they have been working girl in Berlin whose sacrifice of her self-respect is in vain; an African soldier led by military hate-les-sons to slay a German whom he liked; a boy and girl in Germany who still find life "wonderful" after the store of potatoes on which they were to start married life has been depleted by hunger-driven workmen; a German nobleman whose race was old while the Hohenzollerns were still un-known, deliberately sacrificed by the French Army of Occupation to a "Sep-

many authorities, English and Italian, in the writing of her history, and we have here what is undoubtedly a careful and exhaustive account of a re-markable dynasty—hardly less remarkable in its way than the Tuscan de Medici. But beyond conscientious research and intelligent compilation, Miss Muir does not contribute any thing of particular value to the history of the period. When we think of the effect some of our modern writers would have been able to produce, with the gorgeous colors and magnificent incidents Miss Muir has to draw upon without stint, we are surprised that one who has steeped herself in the romance, chivalry and tumultuous con-flicts of those years should have gen-erated so little warmth and vigor into her chronicle Even her descriptions of the Duomo and Certosa, faithful and detailed though they are, and showing a genuine appreciation of beauty, are such as we might find in any guidebook, aiming at being rather more explicit, but hardly more original, than the veteran Baedeker or its worthy successor, Muirhead.

she fails to produce a living drama for us, conveys at least an idea of the character, pursuits and objects of these nobles who ruled like emperors and of the constantly shifting political scenes, now in their own territory. now Rome, now Venice, or across the Alps to France, in the center or on the outskirts of which they played their part.

They certainly were astuter diplomats than their rivals, the della Torre, who ruled Milan in the thirteenth century. Not only was it necessary for them to satisfy the Milanes upon whose good pleasure their sov-ereignty depended within the city, but succeeding emperors had to be pla-cated. Side by side with savage cruelty and deliberate crime were measures of justice, deeds of kindness, and artistic achievements of the greatest magnitude. As Miss Muir reminds her readers, Petrarch, who lived under the Visconti in the friendliest intercourse, was accused by Boccaccio of countenancing a tyrant. The Visconti were tyrants assuredly, ruthless enemies and not always reliable friends, but they do not compare unfavorably with the rulers of their day; in states manship they were far ahead of them; as lovers of art and letters they brought a fame and glory to Italy which in later centuries were hardly to be surpassed. The Certosa, built by Glangaleazzo oeyond the Park of Pavia, the magnificent Duomo, the University of Pavia, the richest and most modern seat of learning in the fourteenth century, owed their exist-ence, their beauty and their prosperity to the Visconti. Amidst so much that is contradic-tory, we must perforce form our own estimate of the character of these men As for the influence exercised by the Visconti, not only in northern Italy, but throughout Europe, the writer, if but throughout Europe, the writer, if discovery that their chroniclers were mostly those who, like Boccaccio, had political reasons for abusing

He didn't hide in an egg shell or get lost in his mother's pudding batter! But in other ways his adventures were quite as thrilling as those of the fabled Tom Thumb. He visited the courts of kings and queens. His tiny ponies and carriage drew more attention than that of royalty.

Your child may read both stories in My BOOKHOUSE—one the English folk tale, the other the story of General Tom Thumb as told by none other than P. T. Barnum himself. The interest in each is heightened by comparison with the other.

This illustrates again how My BOOKHOUSE is different from other children's books. It is remarkable for its wide range yet just as remarkable for what it omits as for what it includes. It provides reading [1] of high literary quality, [2] intensely interesting to the child, [3] which will leave some definite impression for good. #### Gold as Standard "In lien of gold, and in lieu of that money, we have had in the past, and have now, various interesting suggestions for money based upon other commodities, upon land, upon labor. None of these survived. None possessed in the same degree as gold the necessary qualities, and so, gold has continued through many centuries as the accepted standard of value, although always, and still today, we have those with us who insist that we should tamper with it.

the greatest regard—proposed that the Government finance the Muscle Shoals Government finance the Muscle Shoals project by printing the necessary money, instead of Issuing bonds. He says that it is unwise for the Government eventually to spend $66,000,000—the total of principal and interest—in order to have $30,000,000 for immediate use. If that be true as to Muscle Shoals, it is true of every other governmental expenditure which requires capital not available at the time.

Truth Persists

"We do not progress when we tamper thus with the established money standard, which is gold. Throughout the slow evolution of centuries, the people of every civilized nation have come, sooner or later, to recognize gold as the most satisfactory medium of exchange. This uniformity of judgment, the result of long and varied experience, must be founded upon substantial reason. Otherwise it could not have prevailed for so long a period. Fallacy, eventually, is exposed as fallacy: Truth alone persists always."

RALLY IN STOCK MARKET DUE TO SHORT COVERING

Buying Is Not Aggressive and Am Trading Dull-American Woolen Weak

Short covering operations imparted a Am firmer tone of stock prices at the open-Aming of today's New York market, which Am is partly attributed to the better feeling Am inspired by President Coolidge's address yesterday: Industrial leaders, including United States Steel, American Can and Am Studebaker, moved up and fractional Am recoveries took place in a wide variety Am of oil shores.

recoveries took place in a wine variety of oil shares.

Aggressive buying was nowhere in Am Su evidence, but continued covering brought about steady improvement in the general list. Motor, oil and specialty shares made fractional gains, but American Woolen was under selling pressure, due to the unfavorable trade reports, from the textile industry, falling to a new low at 62%.

General Electric advanced 2 points, and gains ranging from fractions to All Bill and Chemical. Colorado All Gall Chemical.

and gains ranging from fractions to more than a point were registered by Atl B Baldwin, Allied Chemical. Colorado Atl G Fuel & Iron, Gulf States Steel, Chandler and Maxwell Motors A. General Motors and Du Pont both responded to the favorable earnings shown by the former corporation in the Beth first quarter. Congoleum and Norfolk Beth & Western encountered fresh selling Br Ed & Western encountered fresh selling and declined from 1 to 2 points. Foreign exchanges opened higher.

Some Moderate Recoveries

Over extension of short accounts, indicated by the unprecedented numthe basis for technical rallies in stocks which recently have been subjected to selling pressure. At the same time an increase in car loadings, taken to mean that the decline in trade had been checked, encouraged a resumption on constructive activities throughout the industrial ligt.

Under the leadership of Tidewater, which moved up 3½ points, virtually all oil shares made brief recoveries, with sugar, giore, motor accessory, independent steel and specialty stocks averaging gains of 1 to 3 points.

Mexican Seuboard displayed strength on prospects that dividends would be resumed on the common stock. Fleischmann, with a 2-point gain, reached a new high level at 50%.

Call money opened at 4 per cent.

American Woolen, which forced them to new low figures for the year of 38%, 83% and 62, respectively, failed to halt the insistent demand for other stocks. U. S. Cast Iron Pipe, Colorado Fuel and Cuba Cane Sugar preferred were buoyant, with various low priced rail-roads also developed considerable strength. Both American Sugar and American Woolen subsequently raillied sharply.

Bonds Irregular

Bonds Irregular

Irregular price movements characterized the early dealing in bonds today, with diminishing activity in foreign and United States Government issues.

Treasury 44's, however, are in demand, selling at 101 20-32, a record figure, Traiding was quiet in the railroad list, but there were wide fluctuations in a number of industrial liens.

The wool market seems to be expanding slowly, both here and in the west. The Easter trade doubtless has lightweight season are opened in July but there is a possibility that the season will commence early this year, since it opened late last year and, according to the best advices, the total volume of goods sold in that season was barely one-third of a normal product.

Some Export Selling

There has been nothing spectacular about the buying which has been done wool; on the contrary, the market has been most orderly and it can hardly said that the market is any stronger consequence of the slightly increased on consequence of the slightly increased yolume of business.

It may even be added that there is still a disposition to sell wool for export certainly there is considerable wool which has been sold for export that is still unshipped. It is also true that prices offered from abroad are higher than can be obtained in this market and sometimes very noticeably so.

Ordinarily, noils are considered on parity with the top when they are selling at two-thirds the top value. This illustrates the extent to which woolen goods have had the call over worsteds latterly.

Expect Move to Hold Firm

Expect Move to Hold Firm

The present dullness in Yorkshire, liowever, is not believed to be symptomatic; rather, it is good opinion in Yorkshire that the next London sales will see values fully established at the closing rates of the last sales with a closing rates of the last sales with a further possible advance. If the closing strength of the last series is really indicative of the need for wool, it would seem inevitable that prices must be at least maintained in the coming colonial series, which open May 6. #### South American Market

South American Market
The market in South America was quiet last week, owing to the holidays.
Stocks, however, are small and restricted almost wholly to the so-called territory wools, which recently have been selling freely to France, Germany, and England. Cable advices just received by the First National Bank of Boston from their Argentine branch at Buenos Aires, say, "Due to the late clip and cold weather relatively, the second clip of Pampa and Buenos Aires Province is expected to be small.
Stocks in the central produce market, Stocks in the central produce market, April 14, just prior to the holidays, amounted to 3111 tons, compared with 5218 tons on the corresponding date in 1923. Exports of wool for March bales in February and 45,400 bales in March, 1923."

Exports of wool from this country since the first of the year have totaled close to 6,000,000 pounds. One house alone is credited with shipping 4000 bales of Cape wools to Germany, while four or five boats have taken wool to London, of which a proportion is to be offered in the coming Colonial wool auctions in Coleman Street.

One interesting sale for export is that consummated last week of about 250,000 pounds of Argentine Lincolns of a well-known packing, skirted and of a well-known packing, skirted and rewound, for which the shipper received net 30½ cents, compared with a shipment of nearly 1.000.000 pounds six months ago, for which a net price of 17.8 cents was received, or an advance in this brief period of 73 per cent.

ANOTHER STEP FREIGHT LOADINGS TOWARD PRE-WAR RELATIONSHIPS

Orders Placed Frequently and for Small Quantities Feature Business

The First National Bank of Boston in ts monthly review of business says.
In recent weeks there has been creeping over the country, and is now wellnigh general, a belief that a recession in business is at hand. A similar movement has been taking place abroad, in-cluding England, and the same at-mosphere of uncertainty, hesitancy, and restriction of forward orders to im-mediate and urgent needs is every-where evident.

No drastic declines in prices or in volume of trading is apparently expected, but simply a period of lessened activity, permitting to some expension of the permitting the permitten the permitting the permitting the permitting the permitt tent another step in readjustment toward pre-war levels and relationships.

Orders are placed frequently small quantities, and telegraphic re-peat orders, coupled with demand for #### shipments by express, indicate two things—a well sustained demand by consumers and a belief in lower prices on the part of dealers. Heavy Freight Movement

The railroads established a new high record during the January-March quarter for movement of miscellaneous freight in less than carload lots—a fair indication of the consuming power of the country. With certain industries, notably textiles, depressed, the percentage of unemployment is extremely low. Of the three special lines which have been vital factors in buoying up have been vital factors in buoying up business, namely, building construction motors and steel, the latter two show

Cotton Textile Situation

The cotton textiles—curtailing about 25 per cent—and harrassed by high and fluctuating cotton prices, have re-cently shown signs of improvement. While southern mill curtailment is on While southern mill curtailment is on the increase, certain northern milis have announced resumption of operations.

One cause of the present attitude of uncertainty, in the face of existing good business and favorable foreign developments, lies in the fact of commodity price decline. Kipke is a three-year three-letterman at Michigan, and according to Coach Brewer, one of the best men Michigan has ever had. He comes to Missouri with an excellent reputation as an all-around athlete, and is expected to succeed as a coach. Coach Gwynn Henry remains as head football coach.

U. S. OPEN GOLF ENTRY

TIME LIMIT IS MAY 14

NEW YORK, April 23—Entries for the 1924 open golf champlonship of the United States must be filed with the United States Golf Association here by May 14, it was announced yesterday.

The sectional qualifying tests, to be played at Worcester, Mass., and Oak Park, Ill., May 27 and 28, will be on a basis of 36 holes, 18 each day. Eighty players and ties for the eighteenth place will qualify for the champlonship round of 72 holes, scheduled June 5 and 6, at the Oakland Hills Country Club, Detroit. The number of qualifiers alloted each section will be pro-rated according to the number of entries.

Should the entries in either section exceed 200, the Professional Golfers' Association will alter the qualifying conditions to meet the situation.

The broad jump may be the source of points for Princeton this year, aithough last year weakness in this event was marked. H. C. Taylor '26, star of the freshman team a year ago, is a reliable man in this event. Two years ago he held the championship of Great Britain in it. H. S. Pole '24 and H. F. Reilly '25 are also showing improved form in practice.

The Princeton strength is much more evenly balanced in the running events than in the field; C. R. McKim '24, for two years Princeton's best sprinter, is counted on to score heavily in both dashes. In the Harvard meet a year ago he was timed in the 100-yard dash in 94-5s. H. C. Taylor and R. S. Sams '25 have been doing well in practice in the 100, while Drews and W. P. Taylor and R. S. CHICAGO, Ill., April 23—Definite shape should be taken on by the championship baseball race of the Intercollegiate Conference during the next seven days. Two leading prospects. University of Michigan and University of Minnesota, are to be initiated, while others are to add to their number of games played, thereby giving a better basis for rating.

An attack on Northwestern University today by University of Chicago draws interest, but the spotlight of the week is on University of Iowa at Iowa City. The Hawkeyes, who have won two games and taken the lead, receive a formidable pair of rivals. On Saturday the Minnesota team, seasoned by a southern training trip, invades Iowa City, and on Monday the strong University of Illinois outfit appears.

Possible Canadian THREE ON TEAM Hockey War Next Fall

-Amateurs Unsettled

TORONTO, Ont., April 23 (Special)-There is more doing in the Canadian hockey world just now than has been the case during the off season for the sure. So far as the Canadian amateur situa-

So far as the Canadian amateur situation is concerned it can be said that the Province of Quebec will be completely reorganized to the betterment of the game. In the past there have been too many senior leagues and teams operating in that Province, with the result that when it came to the Allan Cup elimination games against the representatives of other provinces the Quebec champions have appeared weak. In Ontario there will be some changes among the senior clubs, one of the two Kitchener clubs will withdraw, and there will be only one team from that city. There are also apparently well-founded rumors that Galt and St. Mary's of Toronto will not operate next winter. Already Niagara Falls and London are after franchises in the senior O. H. A. and these will likely be obtained. Both cittes have artificial ice arenas and have already secured a number of players of senior experience.

It is in the professional field that the most rumors abound. The National secured a number of players of senior experience.

It is in the professional field that the most rumors abound. The National Hockey League has granted options to T. S. Duggan of Montreal for two franchises in the United States, originally stated to be Boston and New York, but now New York alone is mentioned. The N. H. L. directors say it is a matter for Duggan to decide and that the league will not discuss the question until the regular meeting next fall; but it is admitted that two American teams will be entered. This is borne out by the fact that the four present N. H. L. clubs are signing as many players as possible so that when the new clubs are admitted the present clubs can turn over two or more players each to the new ones.

It is hardly likely that the professional situation has ever been so complicated. Last season there were three professional leagues in Canada, the Pacific Coast, the Western Canada and the National. Altogether there were 11 clubs, three in the former and four in each of the other two. The Western Canada and Pacific Coast leagues have worked closely together for the last two seasons and the stand the two organizations took regarding the recent Stanley Cup series bears out the contention that they are closely allied for mutual benefit and now it seems as if their bond is even are closely allied for mutual benefit and now it seems as if their bond is even now it seems as it their bond is even closer.

Toward the end of last season the Seattle Arena was sold for a garage and the team finished the season without a home rink and so far there has been no effort made to build one for next season. The league authorities state that if Seattle has a team it will be owned by Seattle men and so far there has been no enthusiasm shown to get control of the franchise. Victoria has not been a great money maker for Frank and Lester Patrick and that city may also be dropped, leaving Vancouver the only team in the Pacific Coast league.

the only team in the Pacific Coast league.

It now develops that there has been considerable work toward the formation of a new six-club league within the territory of the Pacific Coast and Western Canada leagues, Vancouver going into the western Canada circuit from the west and a new club entering from Winnipeg, making a six-club circuit. Considerable missionary work was done in Winnipeg last season when some 10 or 12 professional games were plaved in that city, but the professional players failed to make the impression that was expected and Winnipeg is not keen to take up professional hockey. To make such a six-club league successful, there must be strong support in each there must be strong support in each city as the traveling expenses will be In the east, in addition to the N. H.

IOWA STATE DEFEATS MISSOURI NINE AGAIN

COLUMBIA, Mo., April 23 (Special) —Iowa State College took the second game of the two-game series, defeating University of Missouri 6 to 1 at labaseball yesterday. The feature of the game was the fine pitching of L. M.
Clauson '24 for Iowa State. Although a he only struck out two men, he held the Missouri batsmen to six hits, only two of which were in one inning. In the fourth inning Missouri made two hits for their lone tally of the game, D. F. Taylor '24 getting a triple over the center fielder's head, and Capt. C.
H. Denny '24 hitting safely to Clauson.
As in Monday's game, Iowa State started getting runs in the first inning.
Capt. W. D. George '24 hitting out a double and scoring on J. M. Lewis' muff of a throw from the pitcher.
Iowa State scored three runs more in the third off a hit, a base on balls and two Missouri errors, again in the seventh on a base on balls and a hit, and on two hits in the ninth inning.
Clauson was given excellent support by his teammates, only one error being registered against them, and that E. R.

INHERITANCE TAXES AS APPLIED TO DODGE BROTHERS' $75,000,000

Manufacturers' Estates Yield $1,908,065 to Michigan and Promise More on Future Subdivision

DETROIT, Mich., April 21 (Special)

Dodge and John F. Dodge, amounting together to about $75,000,000, already have yielded the State of Michigan $23.20. $1.908,065 in inheritance taxes, and will give an additional sum when the John F. Dodge became operative promoney is subdivided further in the vided as follows: money is subdivided further in the future among the Dodge heirs.

The procedure in the Dodge inheritance cases as revealed by a study of the records made by a representative of The Christian Science Monitor, is typical of that followed in most states in treating large private bequests.

Tax-exempt securities are all subject to the Michigan inheritance tax law, because the tax is not a tax on the property, but on the individual's right to receive property by gift, will or estate, under the interstate laws of the State.

No part of the estates in question was exempt. except real estate. Under the 1919 inheritance tax law, all real estate passing to a widow, children, brothers, sisters and lineal descendents is exempt from inheritance tax.

The gross amount of John F Dodge's estate was: Personal property, $36,902,727.18; real estate, $40.000. The debts owed by him were $4.084,401.73. Deducting expenses of administration, $494,127.27, and other expenses, the new estate, subject to inheritance tax, was $32,312,442.31.

Working of the Tax

Certain legacles were made to various persons in the will, and most of these beneficiaries paid a tax of 5 per cent. The total tax paid was $336.652.91. and on this amount interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum was paid, beginning 18 months that the comming into effect of the after the coming into effect of the will, and extending to the time of payment. The interest amounted to $143,151.53. making the total mount paid $1,079,804.44.

Horace E. Dodge left a will in which be made certain legacies to various persons, most of them taxable at 5 per cent, leaving the residue of his estate to his widow for her use during her lifetime, with the remainder to his lawful heirs.

der to his lawful heirs.

The gross estate of Horace E. Dodge shows personal property of $39.653,-902.31. This includes $2,500,000 in

Winner Must Travel as Far as Bangor, Me., to Break Record

SAN ANTONIO. Tex., April 23— Seven pilots and their seven aides had ful heirs of Horace E. Dodge will be completed all their preparations early living to receive this property from today for the start this afternoon in the the widow. Consequently, there is $12.- National balloon elimination race at National balloon elimination race at Kelly Field, except to inflate the great gas bags. This work will not be started until a few hours before the race, and will be in charge of Lieut. Frank Kehoe, hydrogen expert of the United States Army, in charge of gas activities for the lighter-than-air work at Scott Field, lighter-than-air work at Scott Field, Ill.

The use of natural gas at Kelly Field makes it possible to inflate the bags in a short time and because of this, Lieutenant Kehoe predicted that new American and possibly world records would be broken. He explained that the lifting power of the big bag is always greatest immediately after inflation, since the gas gradually weakens as time elapses. The gradually weakens as time elapses. The greater lifting power, he said, enables the pilot to take on more ballast, and therein lies the secret of the winner. More ballast means a longer flight, and if properly handled, a greater distance. The gas will be mixed with hydrogen, and getting the exact proportions, and doing it safely, is a hazardous task. Lieutenant Kehoe said. The gas is highly inflammable, and the hydrogen is both explosive and inflammable. Lieutenant Kehoe will be assisted by trained experts from the lighter-than-air personnel at various fields.

Favorable weather conditions are predicted, and the first balloon is scheduled to take the air at 4:30 p. m. The course is expected to be northeast. To break the world's record of 1996 miles, the winner must travel as far as Bangor, Me.

the fact remains that somehow we upon subjects of gallantry, satire, tenrecognize poetry that is good and poetry that is not; and that there are really only two kinds of poetry, the really only two kinds of poetry, the world." Frederick Locker-Lampson, good and the bad. I should be inclined to whom I owe the quotation, was the to amend his statement by saying that there is really only one kind of poetry and that is the good, since what he calls bad poetry is not poetry at all.

A good poem is simply a good piece of work. In it the poet or maker has shown consummate skill in craftsmanship, his craft being to give perfect form and expression to an idea; and we prize his product, just as we do a Sheraton chair, because it is perfect of its kind. Of course, it is unnecessary to say that we prize poetry for many other reasons than this and that we prize much poetry that is not technically perfect because it has other qualities. But the fact remains that nothing is more certain to keep a poem from being forgotten than a consummate or ultimate expression. And the shorter the poem and the more triffing its subject, the more do we demand that it shall be perfect.

+ + By no means the least delightful province in the realm of poetry is the province of light verse. The poets who live here have the art of saying nothing, exquisitely; of writing on the bag of a bee, a Cupid's bow, a halfpenny, a moth, a fan, a mun, a game of cards, or a garland of flowers and literally are distilly so delicately, so airily, so daintily, that their verses may outline epics in twelve books and dramas in blank verse. They live decidedly among the foothills of Parnassus and Helicon. pleasure. Count the poems in the "Golden Treasury" or the "Oxford Book," and see how many have no more seriousness than a flower or a butterfly, and yet are among the poems we love best. At the head are Shakespeare's songs and the lyrics from the Elizabethan miscellanies, the songs of Heywood, Greene. Pedle, Lyly, Dekker and Fletcher, the "Hes-perides" of Herrick, the playful nothings of Suckling, Carew. Wither, and the rest of the Cavaliers, the jesting verses of Prior and Donne, the Greek epigrams of Landor; and, of a later date; the light-hearted lyrics of Thackeray, Praed, Locker-Lampson. Lang, Gosse, Dobson, and Holmes. No one would think of comparing such things with the great odes and elegies of the language but, on the other hand, neither would one consider an anthology complete without them. The earliest praise of such trifles that I have come upon is in a letter of the elder Pliny, where he says: "These pieces commonly go under the title of poetical amusements; but these amuse-ments have sometimes gained as much reputation to their authors as works of a more serious nature. It is sur-world." Frederick Locker-Lampson, to whom I owe the quotation, was the first to make a special study of light or familiar verse, and the first to pullish a collection of what he called "Lyra Elegantiarum, Vers de Société, or Vers d' Occasion," because he could find in English no word that exactly designated the type. In the Prefect to designated the type. In the Preface to his book (1888), he carefully defines it. Such verse, he says, "should be short. elegant, refined, and fanciful, not seldom distinguished by chastened senti-ment, and often playful. The tone should not be pitched high; it should be idiomatic, and rather in the conversational key; the rhythm should be crisp and sparkling, and the rhyme frequent and never forced, while the whole poem should be marked by tasteful moderation, high finish, and completeness." And he concludes by remarking that the more trivial the subject matter, the more perfect must be the execution.

Such a definition shows plainly that many lyrics that are light in tone and subject are not true vers de société. Elizabethan songs, for example, are mostly like bird songs, nat-ural and spontaneous, while the ural and spontaneous, while the poems which Locker-Lampson had in mind are conscious, sophisticated, and in general artificial. But they are artificial in the sense that a miniature, a cameo, a plece of Dresden china, or a Tanagra figurine is ar-tificial—pone the less charming for that. They have generally been writ-ten by men who were not professional poets or who were, at any rate, men of letters rather than poets by vo-cation. In our day the typical master cation. In our day the typical master of the type is Austin Dobson, who is also probably the finest writer of light verse in the language. Employed for many years in the English Civil Service, he made a hobby of the eight-eenth century and became in time a recognized authority on that period of literature, but he is best remembered by his "Proverbs in Porcelain," "Vigu-ettes in Rhyme," "Old World Idylls," and other little books of polished verse. His quality is seen at once literature, but he is best remembered verse. His quality is seen at once in such a lyric as "The Ladies of St. James's, a Proper New Ballad of the Country and the Town," in which his skill in verse-making unites with his knowledge of the Age of Queen Anne.

The ladies of St. James's Wear satin on their backs; They sit all night at Ombre, With candles all of wax: She dons her russet gown,
And runk to gather May dew
Before the world is down.

The ladies of St. James's You scarce can understand he half of all their speeches, Their phrases are so grand: But Phyllida, my Phyllida! Her shy and simple words Are clear as after rain-drops The music of the birds.

Locker-Lampson, who was for years clerk in the Admiralty Office and a collector of rare books, had a deft hand, but by no means the variety, music, or essential poetry of Dobson. He was particularly fond of the stanza used by Thackeray in "At the Church Gate" and by Holmes in "The in peace.

Last Leaf"—a stanza that lends itself It seemed to me then that I felt as Last Leaf"—a stanza that lends itself to surprising effects, as here:

Time has a magic wand! What is this meets my hand, Moth-eaten, mouldy, and Covered with fluff? Faded, and stiff, and scant; Can it be? no, it can't, Yes, I declare, it's Aunt Prudence's muff! R .M. G.

Some white pigeons were sunning themselves on the roof open, and a farm-hand came harness clanking loosely, and were plaited up with straw and red braid. She sailormen, as I watched the little garden. It was quite warm; the ground steamed slightly, so that a faint mist hung low, and everything was wet, with but a dangerously narrow margin between the last splen-dour of autumn and its first sodden decay. She walked slowly up the garden path, looking at the bronze, red, yellow and orange flowers that were bent down towards, the ground by the moisture; she walked up the path, swinging her scissors, till she came to the clump of the path, swinging her scissors, till she came to the clump of Scotch firs at the top of the garden, and stood surveying the country that swept down to the valley, rising to the downs beyond, the woods in the valley golden through the mist. and blue smoke hanging above the deep violet pools of shadow, between the woods and the hills; all unstirred by any breath; rust-colour and blue in every shade from the pale tan of the stubble to the fire of the woods. from the wreathing smoke-blue to the depths of aniethyst driven like wedges into the flanks of the Downs.—V. ### Putting Out to Sea

Standing at the extremity of a rocky point guarding a snug harbor on the Maine coast, I watched a trim schooner as she set forth seaward. The ocean was tranquil, permitting the carrying of a cloud of white canvas, upon which the golden light of the afternoon sun cast a soft glow. The blue sea was unflecked by a single whitecap, and the pine-fringed islands of the harbor were wrapped never before the sense of disparity, vast, overwhelming, between this lit-tle contrivance of man now bravely putting out to sea, and the immensity of the element to which she was about to intrust herself. And besides, were seasoned veterans, knowing many things about the sea from close ever came of calm or storm on this voyage about beginning, it would all be a part of the day's work to them.

Yet, watching the little schooner

Far behind now are the vast red mountains that tower above the winding white road, here and there dotted with dark green forests; and the yet higher Alps that gleam snowy capped and aloof, silhouetted against background of cloudless sky.

Below, the tideless Mediterranean sea splashes and fretfully murmurs over jagged masses of red-brown rock, while far across the water's surface golden hearts of sunlight chase one another.

Today the great exhibition of the fruits and products of the British Empire, organized at Wembley, is officially

The British Empire Exhibition opened by King George. From all accounts it is going to be a remarkable enterprise. All the chief governments of the far flung British Dominions are taking their part. There will be pavilions not only from the great self-governing Dominions, but Hong Kong, from the central from India, Burma, Hong Kong, from the central African protectorates, and from islands and lesser colonies all over the world. There is an amusement park which is said to have cost $7,500,000 to build. Exhibits of engineering and industry will be housed in what are declared to be the largest halls ever erected. There will be model villages from Oriental and tropical zones complete with their inmates. And crowning the slope on which the exhibition stands, is a stadium holding 150,000 people, also claimed to be the largest in the world. Truly, if size and variety of exhibit are what are necessary to make an exhibition "go," the Wembley Exhibition ought to hum with success.

But while the exhibition itself is what will chiefly concern those who are on holiday and amusement bent, the most significant thing about it is the political organism which it represents. As Mr. J. H. Thomas, the Colonial Secretary in the new Labor Ministry, pointed out in a special article which he wrote for the exhibition supplement of The Christian Science Monitor, the British Empire has been completely transformed in recent years. It used to be an empiré. It is now a co-operative commonwealth of peoples of almost every race and color under the sun. The self-governing peoples, such as Canada and Australia, are equal associates, sharing in the shaping of British foreign and imperial policy, but otherwise completely independent states. The non-self-governing peoples are being shepherded so fast along the path to self-government that many observers think that in the past few years the pace has been too fast for their own

The most interesting aspect of the British Empire today, however, is the power which holds it together. It manifestly is not force, though force, no doubt, still plays its part in sustaining the Constitution and the law. It is not the British Government, for it exercises no authority at all in the self-governing parts of the Empire, and is wielding a steadily diminishing influence elsewhere. It is not the Crown, for while the monarchy is more popular than ever, it is popular precisely because it has accepted the status of being a symbol and has practically no political power at all. Yet most British citizens will tell you that the British Commonwealth has never been so united nor so sure of its future as it is today.

Mr. Thomas says that the secret of its unity and strength is that "it is the greatest demonstration ever made of the possibility of uniting and maintaining peace among all the various families of mankind, by applying to their problems the ideals of freedom, justice, sympathy, and common sense." Certainly no sounder or firmer foundations for a commonwealth could be found, and Mr. Thomas is right in thinking that "so long as its peoples are faithful to these principles, the Commonwealth will endure." For these qualities of mind are, in truth, the wisest and best government that mankind can find.

There is, indeed, a curious analogy between the task which the American and the British peoples have been set to do. The American people are taking individuals from all the races of Europe, with many Africans and some Asiatics as well, and are proving that they can dwell in harmony together and be welded into a great people, if they will adopt the ideals and put on the character for which American citizenship stands. The British peoples, (for it is now no longer Great Britain alone) are taking a quarter of the people of the globe, of many different races, colors, religions, and languages, and are proving that, as separate communities, they too can live together in amity and peace and form a commonwealth of many nations, if they are faithful to the ideals and character for which British citizenship stands. It is right that the British and the American peoples should each view with sympathy and support the work which the other is doing, for if they are both successful they will have demonstrated how it is possible for all the peoples of the earth to live together as citizens of a united world.

The Wembley Exhibition is likely to be a great commercial success, and to afford much pleasure and profit to those who visit it. But if it serves to bring home how much nearer than is usually believed is the possibility of uniting all mankind into one great constitutional community wherein war is ended and freedom is secure, it will have justified itself yet more.

As He looks backward from the vantage point reached by the attainment of four score years and ten, Chauncey

What Mr. Depew Overlooked M. Depew of New York, retaining a lively interest in all those affairs which have combined to make his cateer a busy and useful one, finds he has little to regret. Those who have read his memoirs, published a year or two ago, as well as those who the relitical history of the United have been familiar with the political history of the United States during the last fifty years, realize the not unimportant part which this man of affairs has played in helping to shape and direct those activities in which he has always showed a lively interest. This year, as formerly, Mr. Depew plans to take part in the national convention of the Republican Party. His voice has been heard at those quadrennial gatherings almost since the day of Lincoln.

It is not always that one, looking backward across the expanse of years, can say truthfully that he finds nothing to regret. Mr. Depew speaks quite convincingly, even when he insists that he does not seriously begrudge a lost opportunity to possess himself of a fortune which might have reached the tremendous sum of $150,000,000. "I am not sorry that I did not make all that money," he says. He relates that in 1886, by the investment of $10,000, he might have become owner of a one-sixth interest in the Bell telephone patents. He was advised, he relates, by the then president of the Western Union Telegraph Company, to have nothing to do with the telephone; that it was only a toy, and never would be of any practical use. "I have since figured," he says, "that this one-sixth interest would have now been worth $150,000,000."

It would be interesting to be told just what this man, whose memory runs backward almost a century, regards as the greatest or most significant lesson he has learned. He intimates, circumstantially, that he has been impressed most by the realization that there is no limit to the possibility of human endeavor. He has seen those things which convince him of this. Can a greater or more valuable lesson be learned? Mankind, emancipated from a belief in its limitations, can achieve the ultimate of its ambitions. Surely there is promise in such a realization. Too often we dream of such a possibility while yielding to the age-old belief that accomplishment is impossible. It is a kindly and satisfying philosophy that, while rejoicing in this understanding of humanity's birthright, those who evolve or possess it can regard without serious regret the loss of an opportunity to become rich and thereby able to exert that questionable power which the possession of wealth brings.

THE conclusion is unavoidable that with the determination of those in authority to see to it that violations of the prohibition law in the United States are punished, those who have connived to override and disregard the law are being brought to a clearer realization that they will be compelled to pay the penalty of their disobedience. There has never been any doubt that the law could be enforced. Whatever laxness on the part of officials may have been noted has been due to the absence of support which should have come from those in positions of authority and to a more or less general belief held by the public that eventually the vigilance of those determined to compel respect for the law would cease. But now it is becoming more and more convincingly apparent that the weight of official authority is on the side of enforcement. With this realization, those who are charged with the duty of enforcing the law have been given new courage and new determination.

An inevitable sequel to this renewal of activity on the part of those making arrests in cases where the law has been violated will be the payment, in one form or another, of the penalty of disobedience. No longer, it seems, is the currency of the realm to be accepted as legal tender by those whom offenders have sought to bribe. Submission to arrest and trial by court or jury will hereafter alone suffice. Behind the force requisite to compel compliance with the law's reasonable demands there is being ranged the power of a united public opinion, supported now, for perhaps the first time since the enactment of this particular law, by the undivided authority of the national Department of Justice. Attorney-General Stone has let it be known that he stands in the front line of that force organized and equipped to compel obedience to the will of the American people. This reassurance was needed to encourage and fortify those who have too frequently seen their efforts defeated by the interference of officials in higher authority than themselves.

Those who have laughed when compelled to pay a meager fine to purge themselves of a serious offense may now wisely accept notice that hereafter immunity cannot be so easily or so cheaply purchased. Realizing this, it is almost a foregone conclusion that offenses will be fewer. The bootlegger is not a courageous or a hardened criminal, generally speaking. As he finds it impossible to insure himself against arrest and punishment, he will turn to some less hazardous avocation. The prospect of a term at hard labon in a federal prison does not greatly appeal to him.

MANY parents in Ontario, as well as a number of public school ratepayers, have protested against an

Welfare of Ontario School Children amendment to the Public Health Act, which, in the opinion of legal counsel, would confer power upon the provincial department of health to order medical or dental treatment for school children without the prior knowledge or the consent of their parents. Under the Public School Act of 1920, provision is made for surgical treatment of children, but it is provided in the act that no treatment shall be undertaken without the consent of the parent or guardian of the child. Opponents of this session's amendment, which came before the Legislature as Bill No. 111, entitled "An Act Respecting Medical and Deptal Inspection of Publis in Public and Separate Schools," have urged that a similar safeguarding clause, establishing the right of parents to be consulted with regard to any such proposed treatment, should be included.

The political head of the department of health is a medical doctor. Premier Ferguson stated in the Legislature that the bill merely transferred to the department of health certain duties hitherto performed by the department of education. Many opponents of the transfer hold the opinion that under the circumstances the government should have had no objection to adding the few words which would have satisfied parents that no new aggressive medical control of school children would be set up in the Province.

State paternalism has never been popular in Ontario. It is doubtful whether the present Conservative Premier of the Province is fully aware of the effect of such Socialistic legislation—although Ben Tillett, one of the veterans of the Labor Party in Great Britain, recently said, "If you scratch a Socialist you find an enlightened Tory."

The existing legislation in Ontario seemed to be adequate for the state's protection of neglected children. The opinion has long been prevalent in the Province that the only basic idea on which state intervention between child and parent is justified is that of guaranteeing to the child the proper discharge of parental and guardianship functions when they are lacking to such a degree that the child is neglected, or in danger of becoming neglected. Under such circumstances, there has been public approval of state intervention on behalf of a child's health or general well-being.

The amendment to the Public Health Act might have been defended by the Prime Minister on the basis that it would provide a child whose life was in danger of being warped, by neglect of physical disability, with necessary medical care. But existing legislation amply and safely provided for this under the Children's Protection Act. In this act a child whose parents refuse to permit approved medical treatment may be treated as "a neglected child"—that is, the child may be brought into a juvenile or other court, the case be properly heard, and if the child is found to be neglected, or in danger of being neglected, the presiding officer of the court may so find and take necessary measures for relief. But with this Children's Protection Act already on the statute books, there would seem to have been no legitimate argument for the amendment to the Public Health Act.

Humphreys, who has been connected with it for more than forty years, and who, during that time, has become one of the most familiar figures among West End bookmen, this interesting institution has seen brought to a close another phase of its remarkable existence.

phase of its remarkable existence. This bookshop was started more than a century and a quarter ago, and while, if the past is any index to the future, it will without doubt weather any difficulties associated with the changes involved, it has lost a man of more than ordinary ability in Mr. Humphreys. Of course it remains to be seen just what the future has in store for it, but one can hardly think of anything but progressive activity in connection with this firm.

Mr. Humphreys, in a peculiar way; identified himself with this famous organization by writing, in his "Piccadilly Bookmen," the history of Hatchard's—a history which has been replete with facts and fancies of a thousand kinds. Started by John Hatchard, who, when a little less than thirty years of age, opened a shop at 173 Piccadilly in 1797, this establishment has catered to many writers and customers whose names are known throughout the world. One of the earliest authors, for example, for whom Hatchard's was the publisher, was Hannah Moore, and another was George Crabbe, while the list of customers has included Queen Charlotte (the avife of George III), George Canning, William Wilberforce, and others of like renown.

While Debrett's was the chief haunt of the Whig book buyers, Hatchard's was the meeting place of the Torles. It has enjoyed an almost unequaled reputation in the realm of book establishments, to the extent, indeed, of becoming practically a national institution. Its history would cover many pages, and its publications have been legion, though of late years the publishing part of the business has been largely relinquished. The story is still told, however, of one of John Hatchard's most profitable investments, the publishing of Tupper's "Proverbial Philosophy," which is said to have netted both author and publisher something like £10,000 apiece. The history of Hatchard's is the history of the fulfilling of a need, of difficulties overcome, and of success achieved.

Editorial Notes

ALTHOUGH the writer of a friendly editorial in the Hamilton (Ont.) Herald, commenting on a recent editorial in the Monitor regarding prohibition in Ontario, believes that the Monitor is "underrating the enemy," maybe a second reading would have given him a different impression. The statement to which exception is taken was worded thus: "The Ontario Premier is trying to meet the demands of opponents of prohibition, who, though numerically small, are politically influential in the Conservative Party," and the Herald claims that the opponents of prohibition in Ontario are by no means few in number. The intention of the Monitor was to convey the thought that the opponents of prohibition, though numerically small in the Conservative Party, are politically influential therein. On this point there is scarcely my likelihood of contradiction, for surely none of the parties would willingly claim for itself the distinction of large numbers in such a connection.

IT is strange that Sir Arthur Shipley, in the articles on the West Indies which he has been contributing to The Times of London, should have given expression to the old fallacy that every one of Great Britain's sons and daughters who has left the motherland is pining to live once more therein. To one such, there are thousands who, for example, having quit the crowded haunts of some large English city, have never ceased to be grateful that they had the vision to seek their fortune in foreign lands, and who, while they may look forward to a trip back home, have no desire whatever to take up their permanent residence there again. This is not running down the motherland, it is common sense. Nearly everyone has a natural affection for the country of his or her birth, of course, but it is far from true to say, as Sir Arthur does, that every one of England's sons, scattered throughout the world, is "homesick to a man."

Justice and Japanese Exclusion By JAMES W. GARNER, Ph. D.

[The author of the following article is one of America's most distinguished political scientists. He is professor of political science in the University of Illinois and president of the American Political Science Association.]

The enactment by Congress of the Johnson Immigration Bill with a provision specifically excluding "aliens who are ineligible to citizenship" from entering the United States, is to be deeply regretted by every American who desires to see his country live on friendly terms with the Japanese people. This provision, as everyone knows, is aimed directly at the Japanese, although its terms apply to all Asiatics. Its effect is not to raise the bars against Japanese immigrants, for they are already excluded by the so-called "gentlemen's agreement" of 1907, by which the Japanese Government undertook to prohibit Japanese laborers from going to the United States, in return for the promise of the American Government to recommend to Congress to refrain from passing an express exclusion law, so as to spare the Japanese people from the sense of national humiliation which such a law would produce.

The terms of the "gentlemen's agreement" have been scrupulously observed by the Japanese Government, as it has always observed its international engagements, and this Secretary Hughes readily admits in his letter—of April 10 to the Japanese Ambassador. The only effect, therefore, of the provision in the Johnson bill is to slap the Japanese in the face, to wound their national sensibilities, and to humiliate them in the eyes of the rest of the world.

The anti-Japanese agitators in Congress are not satisfied with the gentlemen's arrangement because it involves "a delegation of the sovereign authority of the United States to anothernation." They insist upon an assertion through legislation of the Nation's sovereign power—this as a matter of demonstration even if it adds nothing to the effectiveness of the existing exclusion arrangement. Japan must be given to understand by positive legislative enactment that the United States is free to regulate its own domestic concerns without the consent of the Japanese Government. That the effect will constitute an affront to the Japanese Nation, wound their pride and self-respect, and possibly menace the friendly relations between the two countries is of no consequence to these bellicose congressmen.

The Japanese Government, of course, teadily admits the right of the United States to exclude any and all aliens it sees fit to exclude, but it appeals to the American sense of justice, of fair play, and of honorable treatment to spare the Japanese people the humiliation and mortification which a discriminatory enactment aimed especially at them must inevitably produce—all the more so because there is no practical necessity for such a measure. The provision of the law is offensively and unjustly discriminatory because it puts the Japanese on a footing of inequality with the European races, and even with the Africans.

Under the existing naturalization laws the peoples of Southern Europe, as well as the Hottentot and Ethiopian population of Africa are eligible to American citizenship, and under the terms of the Johnson bill they are to be admitted to enter the United States as immigrants, whereas the Japanese are not. If, the Japanese Government very justly argues, the United States wishes to prohibit aliens from entering this country, it has a perfect right to do so, but it ought not to single out the Japanese people and treat them as if they were inferior, not only to the most undesirable European races, but also to the very lowest types of. Africans. Such manifest discrimination places the stigma of racial inferiority upon the Japanese and brands them as unworthy to enter America. The precipitancy of the Senate, we are told, was hastened by an alleged threat contained in the Japanese Ambassador's recent letter to Secretary Hughes. In fact there was no threat at all, and Mr. Hughes did not so regard it. What the Ambassador actually said was, that he had spoken candidly and with friendliness, believing, as he did, that the ehactment of the proposed bill would inevitably bring "grave consequence upon the otherwise happy and mutually advantageous relations between our two countries." This was nothing more than an expression of opinion regarding the probable effect which such a law would have upon Japanese public opinion-an effect which those prejudiced congressmen must know will inevitably be produced. The alleged "veiled threat" contained in the Ambassador's letter was merely a pretext and not a cause of the change of opinion on the part of the senators.

To every fair-minded, right-thinking American this discrimination against the Japanese will be regarded as unjust, offensive and wholly unnecessary. It is contrary to the tenor of the Federal Constitution, contrary to America's traditional policy as expressed in diplomatic protests against the Russian and Rumanian anti-Jewish discrimination; and inconsistent with every ideal of fair play, mutual respect and honorable treatment of a great people who have an enviable reputation for the scrupulous manner in which they have always observed their international engagements and who desire to live upon friendly terms with America as in the past.

It is extremely regrettable, considering what the world has been through during these last years, when peoples everywhere are yearning for peace, that the Congress of the United States can find nothing better to do for the promotion of that cause than to pass such legislation as this, the likely effect of which will be to convert the friendship of a great nation into animosity, to provoke controversy and to menace the peace, the continuance of which is so important to the world at this time. Those who have insisted upon and supported the enactment of this highly inexpedient and offensively unjust law have assumed a heavy responsibility, and if, unhappily, it should lead to the grave consequences of which the Japanese Ambassador spoke in his letter, it is hard to see how they can justify themselves to the American people or to the world. No consideration of self-preservation, of national defense, pr of public policy required such legislation and it is doubtful if, outside the Pacific Coast section, there was any popular demand for it.

Wheat at the Polls

Wheat will elect the next President, according to Frederick L. Collins in Collier's. "It doesn't do," writes Mr. Collins, "to judge the northwest solely by what you see through the political windshield. You have to get out of the car and look at the place where the crop comes from—or ought to—and find out what's the best thing to do about it. You have to do more than disk the soil of the farmers' discontent, and the bankers' insolvency. You have to plow through the hard pan of financial and agricultural ruin and to turn up the reasons for the continued failure of the northwestern wheat crop, and the chances, if any, of repairing that failure between now and next November.

now and next November.

"The answer to who'll be the next President of the United States—the answer to what'll be the future of old-party government in Washington; the answer to the safety of nationwide investments in northwestern properties; the answer to the price of the bread we eat—is in the wheat."
